Public Tiring of Sex Pictures Says Attorney

By ROBERT A. DONALDSON (United Press Staff Correspondent)
SAN FRANCISCO, March 9.—The motion picture industry stands today where the saloon business stood twenty years ago, according to District Attorney Matthew Brady, who directed the prosecution of Rose (Fatty) Arbuckle in two trials, and is about to repeat it again for the third time.

"The public is long suffering, but when it finally decides it has enough, it looks out for the avalanche. About twenty years ago the public got tired of the rottenness of the saloon. It got tired of having the corner bar a foster spot for crime. It got the decent saloon men, the men who wanted to run high-class business establishments, had got together and worked with the police and legislators to put the abuses of the saloon and the liquor trade out of business, in all probability the saloon, as a decent reputable business establishment, would still exist.

"But the saloon men didn't do this. They went on abetting drunkenness and lawlessness. Finally the public simply got enough of it, and rose up and put the saloon out of business altogether.

"That is just the status of the motion picture industry today.

"The public is getting tired of seeing some morally rotten but highly paid actor or actress glorified and paid as an idol when such actors and actresses aren't fit to associate with decent people.

"The public is tired of having sex shown in their faces. The people who live decent lives, the mothers and fathers with families they are trying to respect the laws and to be bright and decent, are tired of seeing film after film picturing infidelity and 'red love.' They are tired of the 'ther man' as a permanent fixture in the home—according to the motion pictures.

"They are giving the producers their chance to reform from within. If they don't, public opinion won't be any reforming at all. It will simply annihilate the motion picture industry altogether—just as it did the saloon.

"You can't get away with glorifying in public persons with indecent moral and indecent private lives in this modern day and age—if you ever could in any other age.

"If the producers are wise, they will spend their money in cleaning up the industry, instead of attempting to suppress every scandal that comes up and defending every film star whose personal morals get him or her into trouble."

3,517,311 MOVE TO CANADA
 OTTAWA, Ont., March 5.—(I. N. S.)—From 1900 to 1921 settlers coming to Canada numbered 3,517,311. This is more than a third of the present population of the entire country, as estimated from returns of the recent census. Of the immigration total 1,323,531 were from the British Isles, 1,866,508 from the United States and 887,272 from other countries. In the eight months ended November 30, 1921, a total of 76,575 settlers came to Canada, according to Government figures. Of these 23,279 came from the United States.
