POINT STRAINED, BUT ROYAL ETIQUETTE WON

ATHENS, April 21.—King Constantine is causing the Chief of the Protocol Service a deal of trouble and giving him many sleepless nights. At any official or public function, the Protocol Service is hard pressed to find a means of having Constantine present as well as members of the Diplomatic Corps. Since he returned to Athens from exile many countries, including France and Great Britain, have refused to recognize him. Other countries, mostly neutral during the war, have recognized Greece's King. Recently a mass was celebrated for Pope Benedict XV, to which the Diplomatic Corps was invited, as well as the royal court. The Protocol Service for several days could not think out a way of having both present without obliging them to meet each other. The King, in order to reach his seat, had to pass before the Diplomatic Corps. A means of avoiding the meeting was found by the erection of a huge screen between the diplomats and the King. Once seated the King could see the ambassadors, and to those whose countries had recognized him he bowed in salute and the ambassadors answered.

Funny Stunts Among Champs Over The Water

By HENRY L. FERRELL (United Press Staff Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, April 21.—(United Press)—While Europe is joining the avit chorus in razing Johnny Kilbane, the featherweight champion, some funny stunts are being pulled among the continental featherweights that even the resourceful Irishman hardly would attempt. The European championship, according to London papers, changed hands recently without a blow being struck and then changed back again after a few verbal hooks and crosses. Eugene Criqui, the French champion, challenged Arthur Wyns, the Belgian and European champion, six months ago. Criqui set the date and made all the arrangements without hearing a word from Wyns. The appointed hour to weigh in for the fight came and Criqui went through the ceremony. Wyns was not there. The scheduled hour for the fight arrived and Wyns did not show up. Thereupon, Criqui, claimed the title by default and the French boxing federation supported the claim.

Any champion, according to the rules of the International Boxing Federation, must accept a challenge from a bona fide challenger within six months after the challenge is issued. Criqui had the rules behind, but he acted hastily in claiming the title before his case was heard by the International federation.

British fight circles laughed at the procedure and the Belgians wanted to call out the king's royal troops to avenge the wrong. Wyns and his manager, however, said they had not thought that Criqui was serious in wanting a fight, but if he really was bent on battle they would accommodate him.

Criqui, seeing that he had made an unpopular step, told the French Federation that he had not intended to claim the title that the rules gave him and that his friends had become overzealous, or something like that.

The fight probably will be held between June 29 and July 14. If Wyns should not come through now, he probably will be ruled out from under his crown.

They are talking of putting the winner in the ring with Kilbane while the Irishman is in Europe, but it is not likely that the champion will fight over there. Johnny is kind of particular about his referee and they have rules over there different from the ones that Johnny likes to dictate. If all the crown jewels of Europe could be piled in one heap there might be sufficient inducement for Kilbane to do a little work or take a real chance.
