BEAR EMPTIED VERANDA AT YOSEMITE LODGE

YOSEMITE, Cal., June 21.—(U. P.)—A bear emptied Yosemite Lodge veranda the other evening. An employe freed a young bear and sent word to the management. Chairs were emptied in an instant as the tourists rushed to see their first bear.

High in a tree at the base of Eagle Peak the brown cub had climbed in an effort to get out of the valley. He was plainly scared. But when he started down the tree it was also evident that most of his audience was frightened. There was a backing away as bruin descended. Once down, however, the cub started up a granite cliff, determined to leave the crowd behind. Tourists breathed easier and moved closer better to see the bear outlined against the rock in the twilight. They stayed until darkness hid the bear from view. Meantime the dining room force wondered what had become of the usual hungry horde. For a general fire alarm would not have taken more guests from the lodge than that cry of "Bear."
