OLD BELMONT MANSION IS A SHOWPLACE

PHILADELPHIA, July 11.—(U. P.)—Visitors to the International exposition here in 1926 or 1927 will find many points of interest in the old mansion of Fairmont Park. Among those worth visiting is the old Belmont mansion which stands on one of the highest points in the park, commanding a beautiful view of the winding Schuylkill.
 The history of this old mansion is interesting. Once the home of William Peters, who built it in 1745, and a favorite resort of George Washington, it is now a restaurant.
 Wings have been added to the original structure, which was but a small building. One was added in

East Oregonian

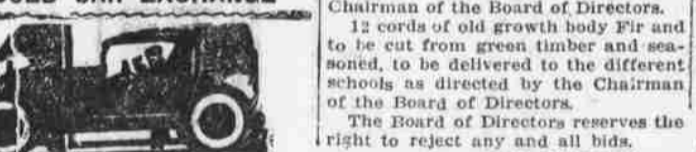

1870 when Duke Alexis was guest of honor at a dinner at the mansion. On the oldest part of the building there still is a stone flag set in the wall on the north end of what was once the library. Bearing the letters J. W. P. and the date 1745.

William Peters, the original owner, was a man of fortune, prominent in Colonial affairs. During the Revolution of which he disapproved, he returned to England and left his estate to his famous son, Richard, who was born in the house, and died there in 1828.

Richard was an ardent advocate of the Colonial cause and during the war was secretary of the board of war, afterwards was a member of congress and for nearly forty years judge of the United States district court.
 Judge Peters was famed for his hospitality, wit and charming and genial personality. He was a trusted and devoted friend of Washington, who used to visit the mansion often.

Washington was not the only noted visitor to the house. Benjamin Franklin, Robert Morris, John Penn, John Adams, Jefferson, Lafayette and the Chevalier la Luzerne were all guests of Judge Peters.
