IROQUOIS TO PRESS CLAIMS AT THE HAGUE

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 29.—Grievances of the Canadian Iroquois Indians falling of settlement through action of a joint arbitration council, will be aired before The Hague international tribunal, provided the Canadian Government accepts the offer of Council of the Six Nations, of which Chief Frank Logan, of the Onondaga tribe, is head chief, by virtue of his office, religious leader.

The offer has been duly forwarded to the Dominion authorities. Accompanying it is a protest against the Canadian Government plan to submit the grievances to a three-headed judicial commission.

Six Nations Want Freedom
The proviso that the differences be referred to The Hague carries with it the pronouncement by the Iroquois that there must be no question in such submission of the right of the Six Nations to full political independence, or home rule within reservation tracts.

For over a year Onondaga chiefs have been attending conferences in various places at which the problems of the Indians living on the Grand River have been discussed. These are a branch of the St. Regis, who established a separate tribe within the Mohawks when the St. Regis embraced Catholicism.

All of the Six Nations Indians are theoretically pagans, though many have embraced Christianity and all reservations have Christian missions. The Indians claim their sovereignty, holding that under the treaties they are separate nations and as such are entitled to direct their own destinies through tribal councils.

When the tribal laws run in conflict with the white man's law, the Indians hold to the tribal decrees and for years have successfully defended their rights.

Fanning With Farrell

By HENRY L. FARRELL

NEW YORK, July 29.—(U. P.)—Somehow or other the boys will talk. It's good business to keep in print, but sometimes the boys open their mouths so wide they put their foot in it.

Frankie O'Neil, prominent American jockey, has to pay for doing some big talking, according to a recent story from Paris.

O'Neil has been going big on the French tracks and, in a burst of enthusiasm, he told a newspaper friend how much money he was making. Without malice, the correspondent wrote a story announcing Frankie's entrance into the millionaire's class. Some one in Washington saw the story and found that his income tax return did not show such prosperity and Frankie is busy telling them that jockeying is the poorest paying business in the world.

Several of the big American dancers and cabaret performers in Paris are said to be writing the same address on the same kind of envelopes.

One of the principal foundations of the Six Nations, and which has come in conflict with Canadian law, is the tribal law of maternal descent and women's control of tribal affairs. In all the Six Nations the mothers of the various clans direct all Governmental affairs indirectly, in that they select the chiefs.

This custom, which has come down since the establishment of the Iroquois Confederacy, is the very basis of the Six Nations government, and is in constant conflict with white man's government, where paternal descent is followed.

The old unsettled claim of tribal autonomy among the Six Nations in their relations to the United States and Canadian Governments also is involved in the Dominion dispute. The Indians also demand an accounting of the money which the Canadian Government holds in trust for them. The funds accumulated from the sale of lands originally allotted to the redskins.

Indians hold property only as tribes, and the property rights on both sides of the international line are involved in the many complications which maternal descent brings about, in that cousins become brothers and sisters, and uncles and aunts become fathers and mothers of children of sisters and brothers.

In this connection the fact that Indians take the clan of their mother, and not their father, in their relation to the tribe adds to the complications.

"The Canadian Government is trying to imitate the ruthless imperialism of Congress in its treatment of American Indians," declares Attorney George Decker, counsel for the Six Nations. "Americans at one moment make wonderful phrases about the rights of small nations and justice, and at the next totally ignore the wrongs done to small groups of Indians whose tribal existence is threatened."

"Some tribes allow their rights to be invaded and soon inter-marry with whites and are dispersed, committing race suicide. But the Six Nations do not intend to do this."

Premium lists for the Linn County fair, which will be held at Albany October 2 to 6, were distributed Saturday, showing that from $5000 to $10000 will be given in prizes to exhibitors.

Thomas Fair, mixed up in an illicit whiskey transaction and shot by an officer near Eugene several months ago, died at a Eugene hospital, Friday, after a second operation on his wounded leg.

Among the sensational rises of youngsters to the top in sports, the name of Eddie Geers is seldom mentioned.

Geers, the seventy-two-year-old youngster, is back on a sulky seat doing the same things on the Grand Circuit tracks that he has been doing for forty-two years.

"Pop" says he's good for fifteen years more if the reforms do not get out a prohibition against cigars and when he is to be able to pile into a huggy, he'll still be around to pat the ponies.

The veteran old driver has been in enough jams to fill a dozen ordinary drivers, but he always comes up, seven years ago he was given up for dead after a bad spill in Columbus, but he was back on the seat before the bandages had dried.

Alex McLean, veteran fight trainer, who handled Jack Johnson in his prime is one of the experts who believes that Harry Wills has a good chance to take the heavyweight title from Jack Dempsey.

"Wills has every physical advantage in his favor and if he can use his strength properly, he ought to win."

Strength isn't the all important factor, however, Jess Willard is the biggest and strongest man in the ring, yet the feeble little Dempsey mauls him in Toledo and he'll probably ruin him if he ever meets him again.

Johnny Dundee, the only junior champion extant, has one of the greatest records in ring history. He has been one of the busiest fighters that ever put on the gloves.

In twelve years of battling he has engaged in 566 fights and he has met every leading fighter under the light heavyweight division.

The Italian has cashed in large on his labors and has been successful in a venturesome little side line of racing horses.

Tex Rickard is ready to produce a birth certificate that Jess Willard is only 39 years of age and is therefore not effected by the forty-year-old ban of the New York Boxing Commission. The real difficulty will be coming in getting some legal papers to show that Willard is a good fighter.

The general run of opinion seems to be that affidavits will be necessary at a coroner's inquest if Dempsey and Willard ever meet again.

Rickard says that Willard didn't have a chance at Toledo, but he fails to describe the process by which Big Jess would have a chance in a second meeting between the pair.

MOTHER CAT RETRIEVES HER KITTEN FROM WELL

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa., July 29.—An old cat's mother love was greater than her aversion to water. Under the rear porch of Mr. and Mrs. C. K. McCartney's house is an old abandoned well. The water is sixteen feet below the ground surface in several feet deep.

While the mother cat was watching one of her kittens at play another little toddler gave a "yip" as it tumbled into the well. The old cat heard the "S. O. S." of her offspring, tore under the porch and without any hesitation jumped into the depths of the well, sixteen feet below. In a couple of minutes she came from under the porch dragging the wet kitten by the scruff of the neck.

GOLF COURSES FURNISH FEED FOR MANY BIRDS

WASHINGTON, July 29.—A golf course in many respects makes an ideal community bird refuge and golfers says the Department of Agriculture, should co-operate in the preservation, encouragement and increase of useful birds.

The broad expanses of short grass on the fairways, officials point out, furnish excellent feeding grounds for robins, meadowlarks, startlings, flickers and killdeers. In rougher spots there is an abundant insect population for bird food. Most golf courses have water hazards at which birds can drink and bathe and may be protected to a large extent from trespass and are relatively free from natural enemies of birds.

Thus, officials assert, birds are afforded ample protection, food and water. But nesting sites may be lacking and must be supplied by artificial nests, boxes or trees and shrubbery along the sides of the course.
