NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—(U. P.)—California is getting the habit of sending seventeen-year-old girls east to win the national tennis championship. Marion Jones, May Bundy, Mary Browne and Hazel Hotchkiss were seventeen when they won the senior title and now Helen Wills seems sure of joining the company next season. The sixteen-year-old Wills youngster reached the final round of the championship this season and gave Mrs. Molla Mallory a hard fight for the title. Next year with the improvement that is bound to come from more experience she is considered almost sure to be the new champion.

The United States Association will have to do something to get some new faces in the woman's tournament next year. From the point of attendance, the championships at Forest Hills this season were a terrible "bust." The stands were almost empty up until the last day and less than 2000 fans saw the final round.

Nearly every tennis follower around New York has seen Mrs. Mallory play so many times and the opposition against her was so scattered that the folks just didn't turn out for the matches.

PRISONER HEARS OVER RADIO PLAN TO FREE HIM OF MURDER COUNT

BOSTON, Aug. 30.—While listening to a radio concert with fellow prisoners, George Rollins, who with his brother Charles, is locked up charged with murdering two A. & P. store managers, heard the news of an effort to free him.

With a party of other inmates George was seated in front of the radio horn. The evening news bulletins were the first heard, in which were the pardoning of Jesse Murphy in Pennsylvania and of the arrangements being made to bring him to Boston to face trial on charges of slaying the A. & P. store men. Murphy has confessed to the crime for which the Rollins brothers were convicted. George was overcome with joy at the news. His inmate companions cheered the news.

MONTREAL, Quebec.—Arrangements have been made by the Canadian Pacific Steamships, Limited, with the Marconi Telegraph Company of Canada, Ltd., to equip the new trans-Pacific steamships "Empress of Canada" and "Empress of Australia" with the most comprehensive range of the latest type of wireless apparatus.

Critics not only see in "Little Wills" the making of a champion but they regard her as having the prospects of developing into the greatest of all American woman players.

She has a good assortment of strokes, she executes them well and she is of the rugged athletic type which ought to give her a rugged aggressive game. Her courtship, also, is one of the outstanding assets of her game.

The youngster has a most engaging personality. Her fame has not gone to her head. She is modest and unassuming to the point of bashfulness. She is also very good at verse and a clever hand at painting. She would rather be a great artist than the world's tennis champion.

Friends of Miss Suzanne Lenglen, the world's champion, says she will accept an invitation to play in the American championships next year and the United States association probably will ask England to send over Miss Kathlene McKane, the seventeen-year-old English star.

A tournament bringing together Lenglen, McKane and Wills would be some tournament.

REPLY ON SHIP SEARCH PLAN AWAITED IN U. S.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—The British people did not take kindly to the suggestions of "Pussyfoot" Johnson with respect to prohibition. It remains to be seen how the British government will receive the overtures of the American department of state on the same subject.

With unfeigned interest the administration is awaiting a reply to the proposals made by Secretary Hughes. Not only would the American authorities be provided with powerful weapons for attacking the liquor traffic from the West Indies to the United States, but British acquiescence will clear the way for similar agreements with France, The Netherlands and possibly other countries.

Unofficial Information.
Thus far the negotiations with the British government have been carried on, for the most part, through the British embassy here. The information furnished by Secretary Hughes has been gleaned from the reports of American consular officers abroad and from American prohibition enforcement officers operating with the so-called "Dry Navy."

This information indicates that numerous British ships are engaged in the traffic and that British owners and shippers are making fortunes almost overnight. The method is for the merchantmen flying the British flag to carry a cargo of liquor from some port in the Bahamas to a point off New York or some other American port, and well outside the three-mile limit. Small swift power boats, usually manned by desperate characters, then come alongside and take over the cargo of "wet goods" for distribution among the wholesalers and retailers on shore.

It appears, however, that the shippers of the British ships have been practicing duplicities upon the American "dry navy" when pressed too hard for comfort. Experience shows that these ships as a general rule are provided with two or more sets of clearance papers, and that these are used as circumstances may demand. One of the proposals Secretary Hughes has made to the British government is that stricter supervision be given in British ports regarding the issuance of ship's papers.

Offers Reciprocal Plan.
The second phase of the American proposal contemplates a reciprocal agreement between the United States and Great Britain whereby the agents of one government would be permitted to search the ships of the other outside the three-mile limit.

This government has been careful to make it plain the arrangement would be reciprocal; that is to say that Great Britain would have the right to search American ships, just as the United States would have the right to search British ships. What the British would expect to find on American ships is not clear, unless it might be arms and munitions for Ireland or India.

Secretary Hughes is well aware that this question of search on the high seas is a ticklish one. Many times in American history it has become an international issue, notably just prior to the war of 1812, when British men-of-war searched American ships for seamen alleged to be of English birth; again during the Civil war, when British warships often seized American cargoes bound ostensibly for Holland, but actually supposed to be destined for Germany.

Nevertheless, Secretary Hughes has some hope that Downing street will be able to see its way clear to a reciprocal agreement. A considerable period has already elapsed since the American representations were made, and no official reply has yet been received.
