HOAX: Hodgen said alert system worked well

sage was too dramatic. "I take full responsibility for that."

That fear prompted multiple people Friday evening to contact the East Oregonian about the message, which detailed a woman being shot in her vehicle by passengers wearing bandannas over their faces driving on county roads north of Pendleton. The message also warned that the suspects "may stop at a ranch for cover."

Hodgen said public safety is his top priority, and at the time he wanted to alert people to possible trouble. When he returned to work Monday, he said, he found out the whole thing was a hoax.

Still, in spite of the tone of the text, he said the alert system for Neighborhood Watch members worked well.

"If nothing else it was a good practice session," he said. "It put some people on their toes."

Sheriff Terry Rowan said Friday that information emergency dispatchers received was "nothing close" to what happened. Undersheriff Jim Littlefield sent an official statement a little before noon Saturday that said the incident remained under investigation and there was no substantial information to indicate a threat to the public. Rowan Littlefield immediately returned calls Monday.

Hodgen said he appreciated any concern his message touched off, but he was working on the best information he had during what seemed like a critical incident. He also encouraged Neighborhood Watch members to check with the emergency dispatch or the sheriff's office whenever they have questions about an incident.

KITZHABER: Will turn 68 years old in March

national economic and racial inequities, similar to today's problems in Oregon.

"Now, the answers to these questions are complicated — I know that — and no one person, least of all me, has all the answers," Kitzhaber said.

"But if we begin by asking the right questions, I know we can make progress, because an Oregon economy that moves some of us forward while leaving others behind diminishes progress for everyone."

Kitzhaber, a Democrat who turns 68 in March, was sworn in by former Chief Justice Paul De Muniz for a fourth term. He was governor from 1995 to 2003, and after sitting out eight years, was elected to a record third term in 2010. He was re-elected Nov. 4 by just under half the 1.5 million votes cast.

Kitzhaber was an emergency-room physician when he was elected to the House from a Douglas County district in 1978. Two years later, he was elected to the Senate, where he served for 12 years, eight of them as Senate president.

"As it turned out, I have spent most of my adult life in this building and I love it very much," he says.

Earlier in the day, the Legislature organized for its next two years. All 60 representatives and 16 of the 30 senators took their oaths for new terms, Democrat Peter Courtney of Salem was chosen for a seventh two-year term as Senate president, and Democrat Tina Kotek of Portland for a second two-year term as House speaker.

Democrats hold an 18-12 majority over Republicans in the Senate, and 35-25 in the House, their largest margins in six years.

Kitzhaber said in advance that his address would draw upon the lessons he had learned in 36 years in politics.

His parents were part of what has been dubbed the "Greatest Generation," which went on to build the prosperous U.S. society that emerged after World War II.

"I grew up in an era where people still believed in their government, and saw it as a vehicle through which they could come together and do amazing things for our whole society that individuals could not possibly do by themselves," he said.

"I was inspired because of his passion and sincerity and his courage to speak from the heart and to say what needed to be said," Kitzhaber said. "And from the moment he died in Los Angeles I knew I wanted to commit my life to public service."

During last week's Oregon Business Summit, Kitzhaber embraced its goals of linking school with work, boosting the economies of rural communities, and modernizing transportation systems.

"But even if we are successful in implementing these goals — all of which I support — we will not succeed in giving all Oregonians a greater share of prosperity unless we have the courage and honesty to question one fundamental fact: the inherent contraction between a growing economy and the increasingly desperate plight of hundreds of thousands of our fellow Oregonians," he said.

"I think we can all agree that this situation is not only unfair — but that it serves to widen the disparities that divide us and makes it more difficult for us to come together as a community."

SHOOTING: Lee was arrested in Washington state

court appearance in Whitman County later in the day on a felony charge of eluding law enforcement officers that arose from a high-speed chase through the Palouse region on Saturday.

Idaho authorities have issued a separate arrest warrant for Lee for investigation of three counts of first-degree murder and one count of attempted murder. Idaho authorities will seek the return of Lee to that state.

Lee was arrested in Washington state after he lost control of his car and it crashed off U.S. Highway 195.

Police believe that on Saturday he shot and killed his adoptive mother, landlord and a manager at a fast-food restaurant in Moscow that his parents frequented. Lee also is a suspect in the shooting of a Seattle man who survived with critical wounds.

The shootings shocked the quiet town of 25,000 people, home to the University of Idaho.

Investigators searched Lee's car and Moscow apartment late Saturday night, Duke said, and found two semi-automatic pistols, revolver, shotgun and rifle in the vehicle, along with a computer, he said.

Lee has no criminal history in Idaho.

The first victim of the shootings was Lee's adoptive mother, Terri Grzebielski, 61, who was shot at her home, police said.

Police said Lee then headed to a Northwestern Mutual life insurance office, where his landlord, David Trail, 76, an insurance agent, was shot. Also shot and wounded was Michael Chin, 39, of Seattle.

The shooter then drove to the restaurant and shot manager Belinda Niebuhr, 47, who died at a hospital, Duke said.

It's not clear if Lee knew the woman.

Lee drove to Pullman, Washington, where police spotted his black Honda. The chase stretched over 25 miles before Lee crashed north of Colfax.

Lee was taken to a Colfax hospital for treatment of minor injuries then booked into the Whitman County Jail.

A story in Saturday's "Progress 2015" edition reported Hill Meat Company in Pendleton has not made products with "unlabeled allergens," such as peanuts, since late 2013. Hill Meat president Nicole Sorensen said labels listed any allergens, but the company then stopped using allergens altogether.
