Matthews, Wagner make marks in different ways

By BARRY WILNER

RENTON, Wash. — If it seems as if Clay Matthews is omnipresent off the field, well, yeah. No NFL linebacker has a higher profile than the Green Bay star, thanks to his commercials and his flashy persona.

If you barely know anything about Bobby Wagner, that’s understandable, too. He’s not into snazzy, leaving that to his Legion of Boom teammates in Seattle.

On Sunday in the NFC championship game, their performances will go a long way toward determining which team goes to the Super Bowl. And while Matthews may add a touch of the ostentatious, Wagner will do things far more quietly, yet just as fiercely.

Indeed, he might be the least-ballyhooded member of this season’s All-Pro team.

“With Wags, just killer instinct,” fellow All-Pro Earl Thomas said Thursday. “Some guys just have that nasty streak to him, and I want another guy beside me with killer instincts. He has that, Sperm has that, Kam has that, and that fired-up passion is contagious.”

Essential, too, for the most feared defense in the league, one that helped the Seahawks win it all last year and has them on the verge of a repeat title — something not accomplished by anyone in a decade.

But, consistent with his nature, Wagner doesn’t make a big deal of it all.

“My job is to be in the middle of everything,” said the 2012 second-round draft pick from Utah State. “Also, the signal caller, mak-final four games and 11 for the season.

“I think if you look at the change of where we were in Week 8 and the bye week into now, and obviously, statistics will show that we’re moving in the right direction,” Matthews said. “Both individually and as a team, as a defense really. So, you know, it seems to be working in the right direction. Obviously, we’re winning games and I’m making plays, so as long as that’s happening, we’re doing something right.”

Enough right to be in their third conference title game in eight seasons, and enough to complement their high-powered offense led by All-Pro QB Aaron Rodgers.

Matthews, who played for Seahawks coach Pete Carroll at Southern California — Carroll admits he misjudged Matthews skills there, not starting him until he was a senior — is confident enough to believe Green Bay can do as much shutting down on defense Sunday as can Seattle.

“With a defense with as many playmakers as they have, and has played as well as they have, you know obviously the onus is going to be on our defense,” Matthews said. “So we understand that going into it. So obviously we’re going to be trying our best to limit their big plays, limit the times they score in hopes that we score more.”

Seahawks among league leaders in ball security, set franchise record for fewest turnovers

By TIM BOOTH
Associated Press

RENTON, Wash. — Pete Carroll talks about it constantly, almost to the point of exasperation, about how protecting the ball is the most important thing in the Seattle Seahawks program.

Not having the fiercest defense in the NFL or a dynamic offense based around a strong running game. But simply holding on to the football.

The Seahawks set a franchise record this season for the fewest turnovers, giving the ball away just 14 times during the regular season. That was three fewer than the previous best mark for the Seahawks when they committed only 17 turnovers during the 2005 season and Seattle made its first Super Bowl appearance.

It continued a trend of Seattle being better at protecting the ball with Carroll in charge. Seattle committed 31 turnovers in Carroll’s first season in 2010. The Seahawks had 23 in 2011, 19 in 2012 and 18 last season on their way to the franchise’s first Super Bowl title.

This season the Seahawks finished third in the league in fewest turnovers. And not surprisingly, the two teams ahead of Seattle — New England and Green Bay each had 13 turnovers — are also still playing on championship weekend.

Seattle’s proficiency in holding on to the ball is a mix of emphasis, conscious decision-making and a good deal of luck. Quarterback Russell Wilson has made better decisions with his passing, watching his interception numbers drop to just seven. Surprisingly, six of his seven interceptions were thrown at home.

There is also the aspect of luck. Seattle fumbled the ball 23 times in the regular season, yet lost only seven. Three of the fumbles were credited to punter Jon Ryan, safety Earl Thomas and center Stephen Schilling.

Wilson put the ball on the ground 11 times in the regular season and didn’t lose one.

The reduction in turnovers was critical in a season where the Seahawks defense didn’t force as many turnovers. Seattle opponents committed only 24 turnovers this season, compared to 39 last year. Four times in the regular season, Seattle failed to force a turnover, a stark change from 2013 when the Seahawks only went one time without an interception or fumble recovery.

This was just the second time in Carroll’s five seasons that the Seahawks failed to force at least 30 turnovers in the regular season.
