Judge rules upskirt photos of teen not illegal

HILLSBORO (AP) — An Oregon judge has ruled that a 61-year-old man did nothing illegal when he crouched in the aisle of a Target store and snapped photos up a 13-year-old's skirt.

It was lewd and appalling, but not outlawed, Washington County Judge Eric Butterfield said.

"From a legal point of view, which unfortunately today is my job to enforce, he didn't do anything wrong," the judge said Thursday.

Patrick Buono of Portland didn't dispute using his cellphone to take upskirt photos on Jan. 3 at the store in suburban Beaverton, The Oregonian reported.

But his defense lawyer, Mark Lawrence, argued Buono didn't violate the laws against invasion of privacy and attempted encouraging child sexual abuse, a child pornography count.

The privacy law bans clandestine photography in bathrooms, locker rooms, dressing rooms and tanning booths, but the Target aisle was plainly public, Lawrence said.

Upskirt sightings can occur by happenstance, he said, citing a famous photo of Marilyn Monroe with her dress flying up. And that could happen to someone riding up an escalator, taking a spill or exiting a car, he said.

"These things are not only seen but video-recorded," Lawrence said. "It's incumbent on us as citizens to cover up whatever we don't want filmed in public places."

The privacy law also specifies nudity, and the girl was wearing underwear, Lawrence said.

The prosecutor conceded that the lack of nudity was a "live issue in this case," but he argued the charge applied.

"Sure, she's in a public place. But she had an expectation of privacy that a deviant isn't going to stick a camera up her skirt and capture private images of her body," Deputy District Attorney Paul Maloney said.

As for the charge related to child sex abuse, Lawrence said, the girl was not engaging in sexual conduct, which that statute specifies.

Maloney said Buono took the photos hoping they would be explicit.

Butterfield said the teenager's private parts were covered, and her conduct was not sexual.

The judge called his decision to acquit Buono "upsetting to say the least."

After the ruling, Buono shook his lawyer's hand and hurried from the courtroom.

Boy's family accused of staging kidnapping to teach danger

TROY, Mo. (AP) — A 6-year-old Missouri boy's mother, grandmother and aunt face charges after authorities said they staged his kidnapping because they believed he was too nice to people and they wanted to teach him about possible danger from strangers.

The Lincoln County Sheriff's Office said Thursday the three wanted to scare the boy. Authorities say they enlisted help from the aunt's co-worker, who lured the child into his pick-up after he got off a school bus Monday.

Authorities said the man told the boy he wouldn't "see his mommy again," and that he'd be "nailed to the wall of a shed," the St. Louis Post-Dispatch reported. He showed the boy a handgun in an effort to make him stop crying, authorities said.

The man tied the child's hands and feet with plastic bags and blindfolded him with a jacket, the sheriff's office said, before he drove the boy to his Troy home. Authorities said the boy was kept in the basement for a while, before untied and told to go upstairs, where he was lectured about staying away from strangers.

Investigators said the boy's family said they wanted to educate him about the harm of talking to strangers and felt they didn't do anything wrong.

The mother is charged with felony kidnapping and abuse or neglect of a child. The others are charged with felony kidnapping, felonious restraint, and abuse or neglect of a child. All four were being held in Lincoln County Jail in lieu of $250,000 bail. It wasn't immediately known if they had attorneys.

Police were alerted after the boy told school officials. He has been placed into protective custody.

Postman blames meth for mail thefts

PORTLAND (AP) — The lawyer for a Postal Service employee who stole more than 30,000 pieces of mail from Portland residents told the judge his client was on "a two-year meth bender."

The judge sentenced 33-year-old John Paul Osburn to three years in prison Thursday after he pleaded guilty to theft and other charges.

The Oregonian reports Osburn looked for birthday cards with cash or gift cards, mail-order medications and DVDs to fuel a drug habit.

Police found out when a man bought the contents of an unpaid storage locker at auction and found stolen mail piled 5 feet high.

The Postal Service went through the mail and delivered it with notes telling recipients they were victims of mail theft.

Springfield man gets 18 months for setting fire to ATM

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — A Springfield, Oregon, man who set fire to an ATM in an effort to cover up illegal cash withdrawals has been sentenced to 18 months in prison.

The Register-Guard reports that 33-year-old Jeremy Shorter pleaded guilty in Lane County Circuit Court to charges of second-degree arson, identity theft and second-degree theft. He was sentenced Thursday.

Authorities say the Dec. 29 fire caused an estimated $42,000 in damage. Shorter poured gasoline on the ATM, then set it afire.
