Homeless Portland man has no privacy, court says

PORTLAND (AP) — The Oregon Court of Appeals says two Portland police officers did not violate the privacy rights of a homeless man when they looked under his tarp and saw him holding a methamphetamine pipe.

The court ruled Wednesday that 50-year-old Gregory James Tegland did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the structure he built with shopping carts and tarps in the doorway of a Portland business.

The Oregonian reports the incident in November 2010 led to his conviction on charges of possessing methamphetamine and erecting a structure on public property.
