DEAR ABBY

Favorite uncle reveals himself with a shocking sext message

Dear Abby: I am heartbroken. I have an uncle "Tony" I'm close to, who is like my best friend. I was sending him pictures of a football game and he sent me back a very inappropriate picture of himself. He says it was a "mistake," that it was supposed to go to his wife, but the text message he sent with it showed different.

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

I don't want to be around him. I'm disgusted and hurt over this. I need advice. What do I do? — Heartbroken In Georgia

Dear Heartbroken: Share the photo and texts with your parents and ask what they think about them. Then ask if they think you should forward the picture and text message to your aunt with a note explaining Uncle Tony said they were meant for her, and you didn't want her to miss them.

one say or do? — Beans, The Musical Fruit

Dear B.T.M.F.: Stop beating yourself up over this. Expelling gas is normal. According to the National Institutes of Health, the average person passes gas about 14 times a day — although probably not as spectacularly as you did.

Because he makes you uncomfortable, listen to your intuition and keep your distance because what he did was appalling.

Most of the guests know both girls, but some will know only one of them. Is there a way we can word the invitation so these guests won't feel obligated to "gift" both babies? Any suggestions will be gratefully appreciated because we are stumped. — Stumped In Ohio

Dear Abby: I'm a female working full-time in an office with all men. Yesterday afternoon, I ate a salad that contained several varieties of beans. I was standing outside my boss's office, laughing at a joke one of the salesmen was telling when the beans got the best of me and I passed gas.

Dear Stumped: Put nothing on the invitations themselves mentioning gifts. However, it is acceptable to include an INSERT along with the invitation that states gifts for both babies are not expected.

I was mortified and wanted to sink through the floor! I patted the salesman on the arm and said, "I guess that's what I think of the joke," and walked back into my office. I didn't know what else to say or do. Today I can't look either of them in the face.

Since this seems to be something that happens to older people (I'm 69), and it's something we often don't have total control over — please tell me how to "recover." If this should happen again, what on earth does

DAYS GONE BY

100 Years Ago From the East Oregonian April 9, 1915

Today, the 50th anniversary of the surrender of the Confederate forces at Appomattox, Virginia, probably means more to Seth M. Richardson than it does to any other resident of Pendleton, for not only was he present on that historic occasion but he stood within fifteen feet of General U.S. Grant and General Robert E. Lee when the latter surrendered his sword to the former and the former courteously refused to accept it. Richardson was a member of the First Maine cavalry which, with the Second New York regiment, bore the brunt of the fighting that preceded the surrender and which, following the surrender, rode all day with General Grant as an escort.

located directly above the left eye, received when both he and the catcher scrambled after an infield fly. Brown said the catcher stumbled and his son tripped over him. His head slammed into the fallen man's knee on the way down, breaking the bone. The youth was reported to be in good shape this morning at St. Anthony Hospital.

50 Years Ago From the East Oregonian April 9, 1965

A freak accident during baseball practice at Pendleton High School Wednesday afternoon sent a 17-year-old first baseman to the hospital with a serious injury. John Brown, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Brown of Pendleton, underwent surgery for a broken bone

Frank Harkenrider was sworn in as mayor of Hermiston following a vote of the City Council Monday night. Harkenrider, as president of the council, became acting mayor upon the death of Mayor Bill Neuffer April 8. The council made it official by electing him to the remainder of Neuffer's term — through Dec. 31. Harkenrider has served more than 29 years on the council and followed in his father's footsteps by becoming mayor of the city — the first family in the city's history to have both father and son serve at the head of the council. His wife Beverly, his three grown daughters and oldest grandchild as well as an audience of friends attended the meeting to see him sworn into office.
