BRIEFLY

Biologists say there's enough data to decide wolf protection

GRANTS PASS (AP) — State biologists are telling the Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission there is enough information to consider taking the gray wolf off the state endangered species list.

A draft status review was posted Tuesday on the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife website with materials for the commission's next meeting. The meeting's agenda includes a formal staff recommendation that the commission determine there is significant information to start the rulemaking process.

A final decision is not scheduled until August in Salem, but the commission is to make the first step in the process — deciding whether it has enough information to consider the issue — when it meets April 24 in Bend.

At last count, Oregon had 77 wolves descended from animals introduced in Idaho in the 1990s. The 76-page status report says they are projected to increase at a rate of 7 percent a year, and the probability of a major drop in population is very low. There is plenty of habitat available on public lands, and wolves continue to expand their range, establishing at least one new pack in the western third of the state.

The rate of wolf attacks on livestock has been low, the review notes.

Hoping to gain greater freedom to kill wolves attacking livestock, the Oregon Cattlemen's Association has been pressing for the commission to delist wolves since a statewide census last winter showed they had exceeded their restoration goal of four breeding pairs producing pups that survive a year for three years running. At last count, there were at least seven breeding pairs, six in northeastern Oregon and one, led by the famous wanderer OR-7, in the southern Cascades.

University of Oregon names Michael Schill next president

EUGENE (AP) Michael Schill, dean of the law school at University of Chicago, was named president of the University of Oregon on Tuesday, becoming the school's fifth leader in six years.

The new president takes the helm amid significant transition at the institution, which was freed last year from the statewide university system and is now led by an independent governing board with ambitions for a big endowment and a national profile.

Schill will have to contend with diminished state funding for higher education and a need to raise money from private donors. Lillis said a reputation for prodigious fundraising was a big factor in the decision to hire him.

A first-generation college student when he enrolled at Princeton in the 1970s, Schill said he believes public universities are the key to opportunity for young people.

"I won't rest until every family that has a child says to that child, 'You should go to the University of Oregon, because you will get the best possible education," Schill told reporters in a news conference on the Eugene campus.

Before starting at Chicago in 2010, Schill was the law dean at the University of California, Los Angeles for five years. He was previously on the law school faculty at New York University and the University of Pennsylvania, where his research was focused on property and real estate law. He earned a law degree from Yale Universit.

Schill's appointment was approved unanimously. He begins July 1, replacing Interim President Scott Coltrane, who took over when Michael Gottfredson resigned abruptly last summer.

Congress will get say on nuke deal

WASHINGTON - Bowing to pressure from Republicans and his own party, President Barack Obama on Tuesday relented to a compromise empowering Congress to reject his emerging nuclear pact with Iran.

The rare and reluctant agreement between the president and the Republican-led Congress came after the White House maintained for weeks that congressional interference could jeopardize sensitive negotiations with

But lawmakers refused to back down from their insistence that Congress have a formal role in what could be a historic deal to prevent Iran from developing nuclear weapons.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved the compromise bill shortly after White House spokesman Josh Earnest conveyed the president's decision to

"Maybe they saw the handwriting on the wall," House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, said after the White House dropped its opposition.

Both houses of Congress are now likely to pass the bill, which cleared the committee 19-0. It's expected to come before the full Senate as soon as

A vote on an actual agreement to lift economic sanctions in exchange for Iranian nuclear concessions would come later, if negotiations between the Obama administration, Iran and five other nations come to fruition.

Obama retains his right to veto any attempt by Congress to scuttle such a pact if the time comes. To override a veto would require a two-thirds majority of both the House and Senate, meaning some Democrats would have to oppose their president to sink

The White House's announcement

A Capitol Hill police officer asks members of the protest group Code-Pink to sit down during a Senate Foreign Relations Committee business meeting on Capitol Hill Tuesday to debate and vote on the Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act of 2015.

came after an intensive administration effort to prevent Democrats from signing on to legislation requiring Obama to submit any pact with Iran to Congress.

International negotiators are trying to reach a deal blocking Iran's path toward nuclear weapons in exchange for relief from economic sanctions that are crippling its economy.

'We believe it is our role to ensure that any deal with Iran makes them accountable, is transparent and is enforceable," said Sen. Bob Corker, R-Tenn., chairman of Foreign Relations Committee.

Corker said Secretary of State John Kerry was lobbying against the legislation on Capitol Hill a few hours before the vote. The Republican said the White House's sudden support was dictated by the number of senators — Republicans and Democrats backing the measure.

"I supported today's compromise

D-Conn.

Obama, whose foreign policy legacy would be burnished by a deal with Iran, has been in a standoff for months with lawmakers who said Congress should have a chance to weigh in and remain skeptical that Iran will honor an agreement.

The United States, Britain, France, Germany, Russia and China reached a preliminary agreement with Iran on April 2 to curb its nuclear program and hope to finalize a pact by June 30.

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., who opposed the original bill as "harmful to the negotiations," sent a letter to colleagues late Tuesday expressing support for the compromise worked out by Corker and Sen. Ben Cardin, D-Md.

was trapped in a part of the plane that was pressurized and temperature-controlled for the entire flight. The worker had been off work

the previous two days, the passengers and six crew members. It was more than an hour behind schedule

when it eventually arrived in Los Angeles, the airline said. There was no immediate word on how much the

Such incidents are rare

delay cost the airline.

but have occurred.

The flight carried 170

company said.

after the administration assured me that the reworked bill would preserve our negotiators' ability to do their jobs," said Sen. Chris Murphy, subcommittee on transportation and economic develop-On Dec. 1, former Gov. John Kitzhaber's budget package proposed $10.4 million in subsidies from the general fund to Amtrak to operate the service. That's in

Johnson:

Amtrak

must change

By PETER WONG

Capital Bureau

legislator says Oregon will continue state-supported passenger rail service between Portland and Eugene, despite press reports suggesting oth-

Betsy

D-Scappoose, says lawmakers will come up with enough money to continue twice-daily runs in the Willamette Val-

"There is no story here," says Johnson, who's the Senate co-chairwoman of the Legislature's joint budget

erwise.

SALEM — One key

schedule

non-general fund sources. So far, the Legislature's budget framework proposes just $5 million in state generaddition to around $18 million the state kicks in from

But without the full $10.4 million, "we will likely have to end passenger service,' says Shelley Snow, a spokeswoman for the Oregon Department of Transportation.

Johnson said that's not going to happen.

The elimination of the service would prove embarrassing to state officials who in 2009 used $38.4 million to buy two locomotives and passenger cars for two trains to service the Oregon corridor. They began service in 2013.

Oregon contracts with Amtrak to provide the service, and has relied on federal subsidies to pay for part of the cost. But those subsidies have now ended.

In the next two-year budget cycle starting July 1, the state will have to pick up the full cost of the service after ticket sales, which cover about two-thirds of the bill.

But before that happens, Johnson says Amtrak has to do something about the schedule to make the service more appealing to riders.

The first train leaves Portland at 6 a.m. on weekdays, too early for potential commuters bound for work in Salem. Prior Jan. 1, 2014, the first train left at 9:30 a.m. too late for commuters.

"It's all messed up," John-

Tale of worker asleep in hold is a warning months and was fortunate he

SEATTLE (AP) — The misadventure of a baggage handler who fell asleep in the cargo hold of a jetliner should be a warning for airlines to improve security procedures, safety experts said Tuesday.

The worker banged on the plane for help shortly after takeoff on Monday from Seattle. Pilots heard the noise and quickly returned to the airport. The worker was not injured.

The Federal Aviation Administration was investigating, but few new details emerged Tuesday about the bizarre incident at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

the leader of a baggage-loading crew noticed the worker was missing and tried to call and text him before concluding he had gone home at the end of his 9 1/2-hour shift.

Safety experts say the crew should not have closed the cargo doors of Flight 448 to Los Angeles until they had accounted for the missing worker.

'This is a 'huh?' moment," said Thomas Anthonv. director of the aviation security program at the University of Southern California and a former FAA official.

"That supervisor said, 'Huh, I wonder where Louie is?' The 'huh' is a yellow light that you need to pay attention to," he said. "The worst thing you can do is just say, 'It's

In this frame from video, workers walk with a Menzies Aviation cargo worker after the worker was removed from the cargo hold of an Alaska Airlines airplane Monday at Seattle-Tacoma International probably nothing."

Anthony said airports ing workers with access to planes while airlines are responsible for the security of an aircraft.

A U.S. aviation official said there is no legal requirement that airline crews check a cargo hold before every flight. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because airline security programs contain sensi-public documents. Investigators are likely to examine how the worker got left on the plane with luggage that had been screened.

tive information and are not

'How do you have something in the cargo bin that you don't know is there?" asked John Cox, a safety consultant and airline pilot.

Alaska contracts for ramp work with Menzies Aviation, an English company that performs that work at numerous airports.

"Our policies and proare responsible for screen- cedures ... were knowingly violated by an experienc employee who hid in the hold of an aircraft and elected to go to sleep," Menzies said in a press release. "This matter remains under internal investigation.

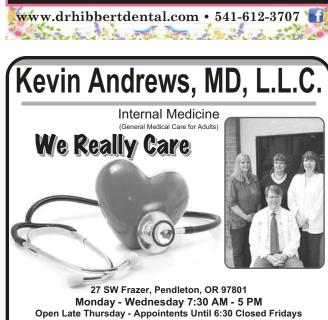

Menzies officials declined to release the worker's name and said no decision had been made on whether anyone would be disciplined.

— In 2011, a US Airways bag handler was accidentally locked inside Reagan National Airport. A passenger heard the man banging on the underside of the floor and alerted a flight attendant.

In 2009, a bag handler for JetBlue flew from New York to Boston in the cargo hold. The 21-year-old said he fell asleep and panicked when he realized the plane was in flight. He used his cellphone to call the airline during the flight.

employee had The worked at Menzies for 18

541-276-6244

Tell your favorite graduate how proud you are in our Graduation 2015 special section in the East Oregonian and Hermiston Herald & share their "Then" & "Now" Photos!

Publishes: May 30th Send in your text and photos to psmootz@eastoregonian.com or bring to Paula at the East Oregonian office by May 18th. Mailing address: Attn: Paula Smootz Private Party Only 211 SE Byers Ave., Pendleton, OR 97801

. , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,
Your No	ame:
Phone	Number:
Graduc	ate's Name:
Graduc	ate's School:
ı Messaç	ge to Graduate: