Longshots Fiorina, Carson launch their bids for president

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former technology executive Carly Fiorina and retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson joined the rapidly expanding 2016 Republican presidential class on Monday, casting themselves as political outsiders in underdog campaigns, eager to challenge the elite of both parties.

Fiorina

Carson

"The political class won't like me saying things like that. The political class comes from both parties." Fiorina, former chief executive of Hewlett-Packard Co., chose social media and a nationally broadcast morning TV network show to launch her campaign. She is already laser-focused on Hillary Rodham Clinton. As the only woman in the GOP field, she sees herself as uniquely positioned to go after the dominant Democrat in the 2016 race.

because I'm not a politician," Carson declared at an announcement speech in his native Detroit, where he was raised by a single mother in what he called dire poverty. To be sure, he's a politician now. But not, he said, like the others.

"It's time for people to rise up and take the government back," said Carson, a favorite of the GOP's tea party wing.

"She is the personification of the professional political class," Fiorina said after releasing an announcement video that begins with an image of Clinton. Earlier, on ABC's "Good Morning America," Fiorina lashed out at Clinton for what she called a lack of transparency, including the use of a private email server while Clinton was secretary of state and foreign donations to her family's charitable foundation. Fiorina and Carson both begin the race as longshots in a campaign expected to feature several seasoned politicians, among them former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, Florida Sen. Marco Rubio and Texas Sen. Ted Cruz.
