Oregon judge rules against teens in climate change lawsuit

EUGENE (AP) — Two Oregon teenagers who sought to force state lawmakers to work harder on a plan to reduce carbon emissions and help stave off climate change have struck out a second time with a state judge.

On Monday, Lane County Circuit Court Judge Karsten Rasmussen agreed with the state argument that a judge lacks authority to essentially rewrite state laws.

Rasmussen wrote that a decision in favor of the teens would violate the state's separation of powers doctrine, reports The Register-Guard newspaper.

"Whether the court thinks global warming is or is not a problem and whether the court believes the Legislature's (greenhouse gas) emission goals are too weak, too stringent or altogether unnecessary is beside the point," Rasmussen wrote.

"These determinations are not judicial functions. They are legislative functions," he added.

He also rejected the teens' central arguments.

While Oregon's public trust doctrine holds that state governments keep the natural resources of a state in trust for current and future residents, it applies only to submerged and submersible lands. He disagreed with the teens' contention that it extends to the atmosphere, water, beaches and shorelands.

Rasmussen dismissed the case in 2012, saying it was a question for the Legislature and the governor. The state Court of Appeals ruled last year that he did have jurisdiction. The case was filed in 2011, when plaintiffs Kelsey Juliana and Olivia Chernaik were 15 and 11 years old, with the help of Our Children's Trust in Eugene.

It is part of a coordinated effort to pressure governments to speed up efforts to reduce carbon emissions. Oregon Attorney General Ellen Rosenblum says she's pleased.

"We believe the Legislature is the appropriate policy setting to address climate change, and make a meaningful impact for future generations," Rosenblum said.

Plaintiffs' lawyer Christ Winter declined comment.

Healthy Back Habits for Caregivers
 TUESDAY, MAY 26, 3:30PM

Many adults spend a considerable portion of their week caring for aging parents, relatives, friends, or other adults. According to the results of a recent study, the stresses and strains of providing care to an ill loved one may take a considerable toll on the mental and physical health of care-givers — including their back and spine health. Learn healthy back habits to keep you safe.

Elder-Friendly Living: Modifying Your Home for Safety
 TUESDAY, JUNE 23, 3:30 PM

No matter when the older person's home was built and regardless of whether it is modern or traditional in style, it likely was designed for young adults and their families. As adults age their homes also grow older, but most are not updated to accommodate the resident's changing needs. Home adaptation or modification can provide friendlier elder living so older occupants may continue to life safely in the comfort of their home.
