Bill restricting the sale of student data moves to House

By ZANE SPARLING
Capital Bureau

SALEM — A bill that would prevent educational software developers from selling student data to third-party vendors cleared the Oregon House Education Committee Wednesday — even as a source inside the Attorney General's office warned of increasing resistance from tech lobbyists.

Senate Bill 187, also known as the Oregon Student Information Protection Act, passed 5-4 with support from the Democrats on a strictly party-line vote.

Proponents of the legislation say that today's K-12 students are monitored in ways previous generations would find unthinkable. Educational "apps" and other online programs require students to create personal accounts that track everything from test results to disciplinary records — even political, religious and socioeconomic affiliations.

The bill, which was introduced at the request of Oregon Attorney General Ellen F. Rosenblum, now awaits a floor vote by the House. The act was passed unanimously by the Senate on April 21. Rosenblum's office said that there had been "pushback" against the bill from the industry.

Representatives spent less than 10 minutes discussing SB 187, with both sides making oblique references to the bill's passage as a foregone conclusion.

"I am extremely disheartened that the bill is going to move today," Rep. Jodi Hack, R-Salem, said before the bill's passage. "My grave concern is about whether or not the software companies will actually be willing to work with the state of Oregon."

Democrats dismissed that argument, noting that SB 187 largely mirrors California's landmark online student information protection law, which goes into effect in 2017.

"We're a market. We [may be] a moderate market, or a small market, but we're a market, and we should be looking for the tools that will actually forward education," Rep. Susan McClain, D-Hillsboro, said during the committee meeting. "I don't see [the bill] taking any technology away. I don't see it taking any tools away."

Industry lobbyists offered testimony both for and against the bill. One pro-privacy group, Common Sense Media, rescinded its support after the bill was amended to allow the disclosure of students' personal information for "school purposes."

"The amendments broadly permit service providers to disclose... personal information... without any downstream restrictions for the recipients' use or subsequent disclosure," Common Sense Media CEO James Steyer wrote in public testimony delivered to the Senate on Feb. 26.

Republicans, however, said that the bill needs more amendments.

"I was under the impression when the bill came over here that there was more work to be done. I don't know, maybe that was the wrong impression," Rep. Sherrie Sprenger, R-Scio, said.

Rep. Greg Barreto, R-Cove, echoed that sentiment.

"With a bill like this, you ought to have everybody on board," he said. "And to pass a bad bill to get it to the floor, I think there's been too many of those in recent years."

In a press release, Rosenblum praised the bill for prohibiting data-mining, unless the process is used for a legitimate educational purpose.

"It's scary to think we live in a world where data mining now starts as early as kindergarten. We must safeguard children's data against inappropriate uses," Rosenblum said in the release.

Oregon budget panel advances paid sick leave bill

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — A bill giving more Oregon workers up to a week of paid sick leave is headed to the full House and Senate.

Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee advanced the bill Friday, setting up a vote in the full Senate as soon as next week. If senators approve, a vote in the House would follow.

The bill is a priority for Democratic leaders and labor unions. They say it would ensure people can recover from illnesses instead of going to work.

The measure passed over strong objections from Republicans, who worry it will severely hurt small and agricultural businesses.

Woman involved in animal neglect case back in custody

SALEM (AP) — A Salem woman indicted on 48 counts of animal neglect last year is back in police custody.

The Statesman Journal reports 26-year-old Alicia English was arrested June 1 for violating her custody release agreement, which was associated with charges of identity theft and tampering with drug records from November 2013. Her bail has been set at $50,000.

English's lawyer, Alicia Hercher, declined to comment on the case.

A jury trial for the case has been scheduled for June 23.

English, who was president of Willamette Animal Rescue, was arrested in 2014 after deputies seized about 140 dogs from the facility. All the dogs were in need of some type of medical care.

A separate jury trial is scheduled for July 7 for the animal neglect case.

New WSU wine center named for Ste. Michelle Wine Estates

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — The new Wine Science Center at Washington State University's Tri-Cities campus will bear the name of Ste. Michelle Wine Estates, the state's largest wine maker.

The name was announced as part of a dedication ceremony Thursday.

The Tri-City Herald reports that Washington State also reached its goal of having the $23 million research and teaching center paid for in time for the grand opening.

Ste. Michelle donated the remaining $500,000 needed for the long-awaited facility.

Hiker slips off trail, hangs from cliff for 45 minutes

PORTLAND (AP) — April Meads' first hike of the season was almost her last.

Her foot slipped while hiking with her sister Sunday at the Columbia River Gorge east of Portland. She fell off the trail and over the side of the cliff. Her options: Find something to hold or go into a 100-foot freefall.

"As I slid down, there was one thought I had: 'My life is about to end,'" she wrote on her blog.

The 19-year-old clutched a branch that broke and started to slide again. She then quickly found a root sticking out of the cliff; it was small, but big enough to hold her for about 45 minutes until passing hikers came to the rescue.

One of them, Wim Aarts, climbed down nearby trees with a rope made from clothing.

Meads wrote that she grabbed the clothing rope — held by several people above — and eventually returned to safety and her sister Stacy.
