Royals’ Moustakas, Cards’ Martinez win final fan vote

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Kansas City Royals third baseman Mike Moustakas and St. Louis Cardinals right-hander Carlos Martinez are going to the All-Star Game as winners of the final fan vote.

Martinez surged ahead of Reds pitcher Johnny Cueto in voting that ended Friday afternoon to become the sixth Cardinals player to make the NL roster for Tuesday’s Mid-Summer Classic in Cincinnati.

A first-time All-Star, Martinez might’ve gotten a voting boost from his outing Thursday night, pitching 7 1/3 scoreless innings against the NL Central-rival Pirates. The 23-year-old Martinez is 10-3 with 2.52 ERA this season.

“When I saw names like Cueto and Kershaw and Tulowitzki, I really didn’t feel like I had a very good chance to win,” Martinez said ahead of the Cardinals’ game at Pittsburgh. “That’s why I’m so thankful to all the fans and all their help.”

Dodgers ace Clayton Kershaw, Colorado shortstop Troy Tulowitzki and Mets closer Jeurys Familia were also in contention.

Moustakas, 26, becomes the seventh Royals player set to participate in the All-Star Game.

Yang takes lead with birdie streak at US Women’s Open

By BOB LENTZ

LANCASTER, Pa. — Amy Yang has experienced success at the U.S. Women’s Open. Now, she wants the ultimate prize.

The 25-year-old South Korean went on a four-birdie run Friday, charging to a three-stroke lead after two rounds at Lancaster Country Club and putting her in position — again — to make a run at her first major championship.

The day started early for 55 players, who resumed their opening round after play was suspended late Thursday due to a powerful storm. The second round ended with the bulk of the field still trying to solve the speedy and sloping greens of the hilly William Flynn layout in the heart of Amish country.

Ultimately, the day belonged to Yang.

She took control on her inward nine with birdies on the 11th, 12th, 13th. She hit her approach to within a foot on No. 14 and punctuated the 4-under-par run. She was at 7-under 133.

“I just enjoy it out here,” Yang said. “And I know the golf courses are very tough; I just enjoy the tough condition of the golf courses.”

Stacy Lewis, last year’s runner-up, and Japan’s Shiho Oyama were tied for second at 4-under 136.

Lewis birdied four of eight holes in the middle of her round, but bogeyed her last and settled for a 3-under 67.

KANTER: Thunder GM says team plans to match offer down the stretch with the Thunder. It had been widely assumed that Thunder GM Sam Presti would match any offer for Kanter, but Portland GM Neil Olshey is putting that to the test.

The Blazers have more than enough cap room to make the offer to Kanter after All-Star forward LaMarcus Aldridge left in free agency for San Antonio, center Robin Lopez signed with the New York Knicks and shooting guard Wesley Matthews went to Dallas.

Olshey has tried to quickly pivot after losing the face of the franchise in Aldridge. He added Al-Farouq Aminu, Ed Davis and Mason Plumlee to the frontcourt and signed point guard Damian Lillard to a five-year max contract extension that cements him as the new focal point in Portland.

The Thunder are under a different kind of pressure with star forward Kevin Durant set to become a free agent in 2016. There is pressure on Presti to surround Durant with the talent necessary to compete in the powerful Western Conference and convince their centerpiece to remain in Oklahoma City for the long term.

But matching the massive offer will push the small-market Thunder well over the luxury tax line and send the total payroll skyrocketing past $120 million. That’s a big number for a franchise that let star guard James Harden leave in part because of the costs it would have incurred to retain him, but Presti told The Oklahoman that they fully intended to match.

“Enes expressed his desire to be a part of the Thunder in our meeting with him yesterday and we have planned in advance should he receive an offer such as the one that has been reported,” Presti told the newspaper.

Federer tops Murray for 10th final

By HOWARD FENDRICH

LONDON — If Roger Federer was going to allow Andy Murray to gain a foothold in the Wimbledon semifinals, this seemed as if it might be the moment.

Murray delivered a 129 mph ace to pull out an epic seven-deuce, 15-minute game, saving five set points along the way, to get to 5-all in the second set. As he strutted near the Centre Court stands, shaking his fist and roaring, spectators loudly saluted the effort with a standing ovation.

“I,” Federer would say later, “was screaming inside.”

Was Murray suddenly making a match of it? Swinging the momentum his way? Not against Federer. Not on this day. Displaying the impeccable serving he produced all match — indeed, all fortnight — Federer held at love right away, then broke Murray in the next game. And that, essentially, was that.

Federer’s 7-5, 7-5, 6-4 victory Friday, built by taking 70 of 91 points he served and breaking Murray in the last game of each set, moved him into his 10th Wimbledon final. One more win would make Federer the first man with eight titles at The Championships, as the grass-court tournament first held in 1877 is known around these parts.

“Doesn’t matter whether it’s No. 8 or No. 1,” Federer said, “Wimbledon finals is always a big occasion.”

On Sunday, the No. 2-seeded Federer faces No. 1 Novak Djokovic in a rematch of last year’s final. Djokovic won that one in

Froome keeps out of trouble to earn lead

By JEROME PUGMIRE

FOUGERES, France — Staying in front has meant staying out of trouble so far for Chris Froome at the Tour de France.

After a crash-marred first week of the race, the 2013 champion is exactly in the position he wants to be — healthy and wearing the yellow jersey.

The British rider’s title defense ended early last year, when he fell three times in two days and, battered and bruised, went out of the Tour on stage 5. This year, he has avoided all three big crashes so far after making up his mind to push ahead of any potential dangers.

“Given what happened last year, it was a big goal for me mentally rather than physically to arrive with the attitude that I’m here to ride at the front of the race,” Froome said after Friday’s seventh stage. “We’ve been proactive in doing more work than normal in order to try and stay safe.”

Mark Cavendish won a sprint finish Friday for his 26th career Tour stage victory — his first since 2013 after also crashing out last year. He dedicated his win to his Etixx-Quick Step teammate Tony Martin, who broke a collarbone in a crash in Thursday’s sixth stage, forcing him to withdraw while wearing the race leader’s yellow jersey.

Froome inherited the lead, but did not wear the yellow jersey during stage 7 as a mark of respect for Martin.

BUCKAROOS: Requa statue to be unveiled tonight

That’s how Ron White felt about his 1961 Buckaroo season, which ended with he and his teammates as the only undefeated squad in Pendleton history, but eliminated from the playoffs due to a rule book peculiarity.

The Bucks tied North Salem 13-13 after four quarters in the state quarterfinals that season, but instead of an overtime period the game went straight to tiebreaking criteria, which in those days was total offensive yards. North Salem won that battle 372-205, and White said a missed extra point by the Bucks in that game is one of those what-if moments that never leaves you.

“If we’d of just made that extra point and made it 14-13 we’d have won,” he said. “I always felt that if we got to play an overtime that we probably would have won the thing.”

But White, who now lives in Hermiston, said that’s not the first thing that comes to mind when he thinks of that game and his time as a Buckaroo.

“I was surprised, 36 years (of Don Requa as head coach) and we’re the only undefeated team. We only had three touchdowns against us the whole season and defense was what won us the games,” he said. “A lot of the younger kids that are out there playing with other coaches don’t realize, but it was a special feeling (playing for Requa).”

On Saturday the Linebackers Club honors the man with the unveiling of the Donald C. Requa statue at Brownfield Park at the north end of Main Street in Pendleton.

The unveiling will occur at 6 p.m.

“For us who played for him it’s really cool,” said Linebackers Club Hall of Fame Chairman Dean Fouquette. “It brings back a lot of great memories and it’ll be with us for the rest of our lives.”

A silent auction held at Friday’s banquet served as a fundraiser for the Linebacker Club’s annual scholarships, which are given to two senior football players each year and dispersed over a four-year period. Terrel Platt was awarded the Don Requa Award which comes with a $10,000 scholarship, and T.J. Hancock was recipient of the Alex Stuvland Scholarship of $4,000.
