Oregon confident of meeting president's carbon goals

By JEFF BARNARD
 Associated Press

GRANTS PASS — State officials say Oregon is in good shape to meet the lower carbon emissions goals for power plants set by President Obama's new plan for combating climate change.

The Clean Power Plan issued Monday by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency sets a goal of a 20 percent reduction from levels in 2012 for Oregon.

Department of Environmental Quality climate change specialist Colin McConaha says Oregon is already on track for major reductions, with the only coal-fired power plant set to close in 2020, and utilities working on developing 25 percent of their electricity from renewable energy by the year 2025.

McConaha notes the plan is 1,500 pages, and it will take some time to determine details of how Oregon will act.

"It's safe to say we are well positioned, but it will be several days of looking at numbers," before it will be clear whether more cuts will be required to meet the goal, he added.

Gov. Kate Brown commended the president on taking steps to combat climate change.

"We have long been a leader in clean energy development to the benefit of citizens in our state," she said in a statement. "Making smart energy investment decisions now is critical to building a more resilient and sustainable economy for the future."

Though efforts to adopt a cap-and-trade system of reducing carbon emissions failed in 2009, Oregon signed an agreement with California, Washington and British Columbia in 2013 to put a price on greenhouse gas emissions, and mandate the use of cleaner-burning fuels.

Oregon also calls on utilities to use renewable energy for 25 percent of their reduction.

Aside from Portland General Electric's Boardman plant, Oregon also buys coal-fired power from other states.

Overall, coal accounts for a third of the electricity used in the state, with natural gas 12 percent, and wind 5 percent, according to the Oregon Department of Energy website.

DA agrees with Bend man's self-defense claim

PORTLAND (AP) — A Central Oregon man charged with murder after the shooting death of his friend has now been cleared, a prosecutor said Monday.

Deschutes County District Attorney John Hummel said additional evidence and a polygraph test support Daniel Norquist's claim of self-defense.

"It is never too late to ensure justice is served," Hummel said in a statement.

The victim, Andrew Cordes of Bend, was shot four times shortly after midnight July 25. Court records show the weapon was a shotgun.

Norquist, 34, and Cordes, 30, had been friends for more than a decade and lived next door to each other in a duplex owned by Cordes.

The two were together for several hours before the gunfire erupted in Norquist's side of the duplex. Both men were intoxicated, Hummel said.

Spokane sues Monsanto over contamination

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — The city of Spokane is suing the international agrochemical giant Monsanto, which it blames for pollution in the Spokane River.

The lawsuit, filed last week in U.S. District Court in Spokane, alleges that the company sold chemicals that it knew for decades were a danger to people and the environment, The Spokesman-Review reported.

The suit doesn't specify the damages being sought. But Marlene Feist, the city's utilities spokeswoman, noted the city will spend $300 million in the coming years to keep polychlorinated biphenyls and other pollutants from entering the river.

"Monsanto knew that PCBs would contaminate water supplies, would degrade marine habitats, would kill fish species, and would endanger birds and animals," the complaint says. "In addition, Monsanto knew PCBs are associated with serious illnesses and cancers in humans and that humans may be exposed to PCBs" through eating or touching fish.

Monsanto was the sole producer of PCBs between 1935 and 1979, when Congress banned them. The chemicals, developed by Monsanto as a coolant in electrical transformers and capacitors, were used in many products, including paint, hydraulic fluids, sealants and ink. According to the lawsuit, Monsanto learned by the 1930s that the chemicals were toxic, but it continued making them and concealed the danger from government officials.

Monsanto said in a written statement that a previous incarnation of the company produced the PCBs, which it said "served an important fire protection and safety purpose."
