DEAR ABBY The new girl at school isn't shy around boys

JEANNE

PHILLIPS

Advice

Dear Abby: I'm a 17-year-old girl in high school. Recently, I became friends with a new girl at school. She's 15. She has a boyfriend at her old school, but she talks to guys at this school she thinks are cute. She told me some of them want to hook up with her and she seems happy about it. She even talked about going to a school dance with them.

I'm worried she might be cheating on her boyfriend, but I don't know what to do. I don't know him, so I don't think I can tell him what's happening. When she mentioned the guys at school and I asked her, "What about your boyfriend?" she just kinda changed the subject. - Teen In Pennsylvania

Dear Teen: High school romances aren't like marriages. While some of them may last forever, most don't. That's why I'm advising you to take a step back, stay out of this girl's love life, and stop worrying about her old boyfriend. If she really cared about his feelings, she wouldn't be flirting with the boys at school. In time, he will find someone else to ease his broken heart.

Dear Abby: I met someone I really like eight months ago. The problem is, I can't get him to do anything except sit at home and watch TV.

I have suggested doing things he is interested in. But when a friend called, he went out to a ballgame without hesitation. I had been asking him for months to go. He also went to a music festival with friends. But if I suggest anything, he can't do it. He says he will "sometime in the future," but how should I take this? We have never been out to eat or seen a movie.

Am I being childish or asking too much too soon? — Underwhelmed In Michigan

Dear Underwhelmed: Too soon? Eight months? You're not childish; you are thinking rationally. Sitting around and watching television requires no effort on his part — and I'll bet you're providing the snacks, too. Forgive me for seeming judgmental, but the man you're involved with is acting like a self-centered mooch, and it's unfair to you.

Dear Abby: I started a new job that requires me to deal with the public. I am now encountering an unexpected issue I didn't know I'd have with myself. It's receiving compliments.

On more than one occasion, men have told me I'm "beautiful." Instead of handling it gracefully, it makes me defensive and I seem rude without meaning to be that way. Comments of this nature make me extremely uncomfortable

I've never had strangers tell me things like this before. My co-workers think I'm crazy for not eating it up, but I'm left feeling uneasy for the rest of the day. There has to be a better way of handling this than the way I have been. Any advice? — Defensive In Arkansas

Dear Defensive: Yes. The best way to handle a compliment is to be gracious and accept it. Say thank you and refrain from using it as an excuse to parade your insecurities.

The first exhibition of the 1915 Round-up films in this city will be given tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in the Temple Theater for the stockholders of the association. Manager Frank Downy tendered the directors the use of the theater for this private exhibition. If the pictures are satisfactory, two or three sets will probably be sent to the Panama-Pacific exposition to take the place of the past year films now being exhibited there. Some delay has been caused in getting these films out through an entanglement in which the photographers found themselves.

A teenage burglar, surprised in the act by a Pendleton woman returning to her home Friday afternoon, is the object of a search by local law officers today after he beat his victim and then temporarily abducted her. The crime took place in broad daylight in the heart of the city just off Highway 395. Mrs. Myrtle Winslow said she surprised the young assailant, who was judged to be between 17 and 18 years old, when she came home from work at 1:30 p.m., her husband's coin collection and forced Mrs. Winslow to accompany him outside where they both got into the Winslow car. He drove south on Highway 395 for a short distance and then returned to town letting Mrs. Winslow off at her home. The car was found abandoned a short distance from the home.

A day care center unique in the Northwest will open by December at the J.R. Simplot Co. potato processing plant near Hermiston. Simplot has joined forces with Head Start and the Hermiston Day Care Center in a program for 20 children of Simplot workers in a remodeled farmhouse near the plant. Sixteen children, ages 3 and 4, will spend the morning in the Head Start program. The remaining four will be infants and toddlers and will be taken care of by a Day Care Center employee. In the afternoon, all 20 children will become the responsibility of Day Care Center employees working at the site. The partnership was announced by LaDonna Quaempts, human resources manager at Simplot; Cathy Wamsley, director of Head Start program for Umatilla and Morrow counties; and Kay Burns, director of the Hermiston Day Care Thought for Today: "All forms of totalitarianism try to avoid the strange, the problematic, the critical, the rational. To do so, they must deny the metropolitan spirit, equalize everything in city and country, and retain a center which is not the center of anything because everything else is swallowed up by it." — Paul Tillich, American theologian (1886-1965).
