Hearing underway for judge who wouldn't perform gay weddings

PORTLAND (AP) — A disciplinary hearing began Monday for an Oregon judge who is accused of a variety of ethics violations that include screening marriage applicants to exclude same-sex couples.

Marion County Circuit Court Judge Vance Day went before the Commission on Judicial Fitness and Disability for the start of a trial-like proceeding that is expected to last two weeks.

Day is accused of breaking several rules from the Code of Judicial Conduct, including a requirement that judges "observe high standards of conduct" so their integrity and independence is preserved.

Day has acknowledged that after gay marriage became legal in Oregon last year, he told his judicial clerk that any same-sex couples who wanted him to preside over their wedding should be referred to another judge.

A few months later, Day stopped doing weddings altogether. He said he's not aware of any gay couples who sought his services.

Day is also accused of hanging a portrait of Adolf Hitler in the Salem courthouse, soliciting money from lawyers appearing before him, threatening a youth-sports referee, allowing a convicted felon to handle a gun, and lying to ethics investigators.

Day, a former Oregon Republican Party chairman, has denied he violated judicial ethics rules, and said even if he did, the rules are unconstitutional. He said he's being targeted because of his Christian beliefs.

"It appears that the commission has thrown everything in but the kitchen sink," Day told The Associated Press in September. "The clear issue that they're after me on is that I had stopped doing weddings because I have a firmly held religious conviction."

Day is the head of Veterans Treatment Court, which aims to provide intensive monitoring of veterans to treat drug and alcohol problems as an alternative to jail. Several of the allegations against him stem from his interactions with veterans and displays he placed around his courtroom.

The judge says the Hitler portrait was not intended to glorify the Nazi dictator but was part of a display on democracy's defeat of fascism. He says he solicited money from lawyers to pay for patriotic displays intended to inspire veterans who ran afoul of the law.

A panel of judges, lawyers and members of the public will decide whether sanctions are warranted and make recommendations to the Oregon Supreme Court, which has the final say.

Health Authority proposes collecting pot sales stats

By PARIS ACHEN
 Capital Bureau

The Oregon Health Authority has proposed starting to collect statewide statistics on recreational and medical marijuana sales at registered medical marijuana dispensaries.

Such a move would give the public a better sense of how the legalized marijuana industry is doing instead of relying only on estimates from marijuana trade associations.

The health authority's proposal gained verbal support from members of a new marijuana rules advisory committee during their first meeting Monday.

The committee, made up of members of the marijuana industry and representatives from public safety and health organizations, gives feedback to the health authority on proposed medical marijuana regulations before final adoption.

The information would be useful for the marijuana industry, policymakers and the public and would show how the retail side is affecting medical marijuana sales, said Multnomah County health officer Paul Lewis, who sits on the rules committee.

Estimates on legal recreational marijuana sales so far have come from the Oregon Retailers of Cannabis Association. The association estimated that dispensaries sold about $11 million of pot in the first week after recreational pot sales became legal Oct. 1.

Dispensary owners may want the health authority to keep their individual sales information confidential to protect their business interests but would likely agree to having their individual sales numbers used to calculate a statewide number, said committee member Robert Blake of the nonprofit medical marijuana trade association Oregonians for Better Health Inc.

Dispensaries are already required to record information on amounts of marijuana sales and to keep that information on its premises. The health authority may request to see the information but has no mandate to collect and aggregate it from all of the state's dispensaries.

The health authority's proposal Monday called for collecting data on both medical and recreational sales.

The health authority has until March to come up with permanent rules for the largely unregulated medical marijuana industry. The "permanent" rules have an expiration date of Dec. 31, 2016, but will replace temporary rules that allowed limited recreational retail sales out of medical marijuana dispensaries beginning Oct. 1.

The health authority oversees sales of both medical and recreational marijuana until late next year when regulation of recreational marijuana shifts to the Oregon Liquor Control Commission.
