Andy White, drummer on Beatles' first hit, dead at 85

By HILLEL ITALIEAP
National Writer

NEW YORK — Andy White, a top session drummer in England during the 1960s who played on songs by Tom Jones and Herman's Hermits among others and stepped in for newcomer Ringo Starr as the Beatles recorded their debut single "Love Me Do," has died.

White, 85, died Monday at his home in Caldwell, New Jersey. He died several days after suffering a stroke, his wife, Thea, told The Associated Press on Wednesday.

The Scottish-born White was already an experienced musician when EMI official Ron Richards called in September 1962 and asked him to come to the Abbey Road studio in London and help with a session by a new band from Liverpool. That band — the Beatles — was working on the John Lennon-Paul McCartney song "Love Me Do" and producer George Martin was unsatisfied with the work by Starr, who had recently replaced Pete Best.

Two versions of the song were released — one with White on drums and Starr on tambourine, and one with Starr on drums — and each have appeared numerous times over the decades. "Love Me Do" was a top 20 hit in England in the fall of 1962 and topped the charts in the U.S. two years later, at the height of Beatlemania. White also played drums on the song's original B-side, "P.S. I Love You," which featured Starr on maracas.

The session lasted just a few hours. White received a small fee and never played with the Beatles again.

"He didn't talk about it very much, except to joke about it," Thea White told the AP. "He liked to say, 'It could have been anybody. It just happened to be me.'"

White went on to have a diverse and productive career, whether backing Jones on his hit "It's Not Unusual" or touring with Marlene Dietrich. Steve Van Zandt of the E Street Band and "The Sopranos" fame recruited him as a consultant for the film "Not Fade Away," a 2012 release about a '60s rock band in New Jersey that Van Zandt executive produced.

White may not have thought about the Beatles session often, but Starr would long brood over his temporary demotion. In 1998, he finally recorded "Love Me Do" himself, featuring Starr on vocals and, of course, drums.

"For the last 35 years, I've never let George Martin forget it," Starr told the AP at the time.

Big decrease in number of 'dropout factory' high schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation has far fewer so-called "dropout factory" high schools these days, down sharply from 2008 as more students leave high school with a diploma, according to a new report.

The number of dropout factories — where less than 60 percent of students who started as freshmen remain enrolled four years later — dropped from 1,812 in 2008 to 1,040 last year. Also down since 2008 is the number of high school dropouts, falling from 1 million in 2008 to about 744,000 in 2012 — a 27 percent cut in four years.

The numbers were released Tuesday in a report from the Alliance for Excellent Education, America's Promise Alliance, Civic Enterprises and the Everyone Graduates Center at the School of Education at Johns Hopkins University.

Education Secretary Arne Duncan said the report shows real progress toward ensuring that all students have access to a quality education.

"Turning around schools that have struggled for years, sometimes decades, is some of the hardest work but most important work in education," Duncan said in a phone call with reporters.

Robert Balfanz, head of the Everyone Graduates Center, said some of the dropout factory schools got better by providing teacher coaching, giving teachers more time to collaborate and offering more support for students at high-need schools.

Other schools, Balfanz said, were closed and replaced with better alternatives or parents left and transferred their children to other schools.

Students attending schools with low-graduation rates are disproportionately poor and minority, said the report. Turning those schools around remains a priority, said Duncan, as he called for eliminating dropout factories by 2020.

Duncan used the report to push Congress to return to work on an update of the Bush-era No Child Left Behind education law. The House and Senate each passed their own versions of rewrite legislation in July, but need to reconcile the differences between the two bills.

Duncan said any compromise measure needs to include more accountability, especially for the lowest-performing schools.
