'Tis the season

Holiday season kicks off with local bazaars

By TAMMY MALGESINI
East Oregonian

Some of the tell-tale signs that the holiday season is approaching includes Christmas music, festive light displays and bazaars.

Many area service clubs, fraternal groups and nonprofit organizations take advantage of people looking for gift ideas and presents.

In Umatilla and Morrow counties, the bazaar season typically starts the first weekend in November, picks up speed after Thanksgiving and then dwindles as Christmas gets closer.

Gert Hawthorne has organized an Autumn Bazaar for about five years at McKay Creek Estates in Pendleton. In addition, she makes arrangements for one in the late spring.

A member of the Pendleton Relay for Life committee, Hawthorne's motivation is to collect vendor fees to help in raising money for the American Cancer Society.

Teresa Moncrief, recording secretary for the Hermiston Emblem Club, said the organization has hosted its Holiday Bazaar for at least 10 years.

Money raised by the group, which is an auxiliary of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, goes to help with many community causes. Among them, Moncrief said, are Domestic Violence Services, Vange John Memorial Hospice, the Hermiston Police Department Christmas Express and Hermiston Public Library programs. In addition, the group provides scholarships at the local, state and national level.

"We really believe in educating our kids," Moncrief said.

Hawthorne used to sell Home Interiors and Gifts and would host open houses with other direct sales consultants. The idea of hosting a bazaar with home business vendors sprang from that, she said.

Hawthorne has many regulars that participate in both the fall and spring bazaars. To solicit additional vendors, Hawthorne utilized the Pendleton classifieds on Facebook. Also, this year three
