VACCINE: PSD still had 28 students behind on their vaccinations as of Tuesday

Tuesday. "Immunizations are safe and really help protect those students and the community, as well as kids who cannot receive vaccinations, who are protected by the herd immunity."

Waldern pointed to lower numbers of outbreaks for diseases such as chicken pox since the implementation of required vaccinations. Not having a disease like chicken pox or measles means the student is able to remain in school. Umatilla County Health will be open and able to provide vaccinations all week.

As of Tuesday, the Pendleton School District still had 28 students — less than 1 percent of the district's 3,200 students — behind on their vaccinations.

"Our secretaries work really hard with our parents getting them the information, and our school-based health center will be offering vaccinations today and tomorrow," said Tricia Mooney, assistant superintendent. "Obviously one of our board goals in the district is to create a safe and healthy learning environment, and part of that is the physical, medical health. That's important to make sure that we're keeping all of our kids healthy and safe."

In Hermiston, 120 students remained on the exclusion list as of Tuesday afternoon, according to Jon Mishra, executive director of special programs. School secretaries and nurses have been in contact with families at risk for exclusion, and staff at the new Wellness Center at Hermiston High School, which connects all Hermiston students and staff with medical practitioners from Family Health Associates, has been scheduling well-child checks and vaccinations. The clinic recently opened and has not yet added art to the walls or blinds on the windows.

"We've already seen an increase in numbers in well-child checks to make sure they have those last-minute vaccinations done," Tiffany Fitzmorris, clinic supervisor, said Monday. "The school nurse has been working around the clock getting ahead of all those parents, and the secretary just sent five or six over last week to schedule well-child checks, and we were able to get those taken care of."

Exclusion day is part of the Oregon Immunization Program, which works to have all children vaccinated against preventable diseases.

Families may file an exemption from the vaccination requirements based on medical or non-medical reasons; however, the state tightened exemption requirements for the 2015-6 school year with Senate Bill 895. The new restrictions changed the exemption process to require a "Vaccine Education Certificate" from a healthcare provider with all non-medical exemptions and made all religious exemptions signed prior to March 1, 2014, invalid.
