DEAR ABBY

Hard-working sister balks at supporting lazy brothers

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

Dear Abby: I am a community college sophomore (age 20) in an international honor society...

responsibility is not and should not be yours.

Dear Abby: I just got married to a beautiful woman. She's tall and elegant. The problem is, she's addicted to taking pictures of herself...

When we're driving, she's busy taking selfies. When we go out, she asks me to take pictures of her...

When we are out to dinner and I get up to go to the restroom, she asks total strangers to take her picture...

I have told her many times how much this annoys me, but she says I am preventing her from what she enjoys...

Dear Too Many Photo Ops: You have married a beautiful (tall, elegant) piece of arm candy...

It will take effort on your part to help her recognize that what she has to offer beneath the surface is at least as important as her looks...

I have worked hard and excelled at my studies, as well as in my friendships and sports. However, my brothers have not...

I know it's not healthy for me to think this way, but I am afraid I am going to be the one who has to support them...

How do I get across to them that they're not children anymore and they need to take their education seriously?

There is truth to the saying, "The Lord helps those who help themselves..."

That message should come from them. That your parents would allow Aaron to sit around all day playing video games rather than become independent means they are his enablers.
