Armchair closes book on downtown store

East Oregonian

Due to declining sales, Armchair Books will close its doors in April after 34 years

Co-owner Terry Dallas said business has been declining for years, but a particularly slow sales period to mark the beginning of 2016 caused her to pull the plug.

Armchair will sell of its remaining inventory before permanently shutting its doors April 30.

Dallas bought Armchair 27 years ago after a brief period as the store's bookkeeper. Since then, she's enjoyed being among the dozens of books that line Armchair's walls and tables and shooting the breeze with Armchair's loyal patrons, some of whom broke into tears upon hearing of Armchair's impending closure. While she'll miss their company, Dallas said it simply wasn't enough to pay the

"Should I buy a new garbage can or put new duct tape on the old can?" Dallas said of her thought process before the decision to close.

Dallas attributes Armchair's demise to the usual culprits when it comes to the shutterings of independent bookstores e-books and Amazon.

Dallas also said the state's decision to raise the minimum wage to $12.50 over the next six years would make it difficult for her to meet the payroll of her five parttime workers.

Armchair will also be a loss to local publishers and community events, which used the bookstore as a box office.

Amrchair's closure leaves Pendleton with two bookstores, Pendleton Book Co. and Crossroads Books and More, which Dallas was happy to call when a customer couldn't find a book in her store.

Despite leaving Armchair, Dallas said she won't be leaving Pendleton and will be happy to shoot the breeze with her former regulars whenever she can.

MARKET: Downtown Association has stayed out of fray

didn't honor the condition and he wrote a letter to McCune warning that the market's permit wouldn't be issued if it did not address the issue. In response, McCune initially told the city the farmers market would seek another

In an interview Monday, Corbett said he was glad to hear the market was reconsidering its move.

"I've wanted the farmers market to stay on Main Street all along," he said.

Although he has stayed in touch with McCune, Corbett said he hasn't talked with her directly about the matter yet.

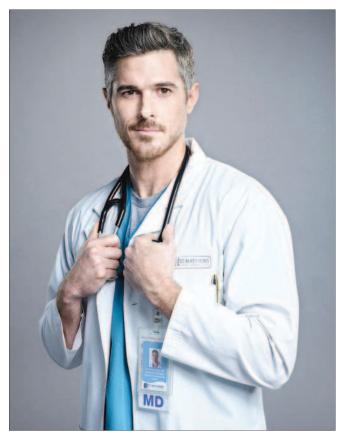

One group staying out of the fray for now is the Pendleton Downtown Association, a coalition representing about 50 businesses in the down-

Association President Fred Bradbury said he didn't want to comment about the farmers market until he spoke with association's board about its official position.

McCune didn't commit to a timeline, but said the market would secure a location before its season starts May 6.
