Pierce wins GOP nomination, sets eyes on Gov. Brown's seat

By PARIS ACHEN
Capital Bureau

SALEM — Salem physician Bud Pierce has won the Republican nomination for Oregon governor.

In November he will face Democrat nominee Gov. Kate Brown, who was elevated to the Governor's Office when John Kitzhaber resigned last year. The winner will serve the two years remaining in Kitzhaber's term.

"Tonight's victory is the result of incredible teamwork and the hard work of many fine people," he said.

Pierce defeated former state GOP chairman Allen Alley, the next highest vote getter in a field of five.

"Oregonians are tired of empty political promises and puppet leaders who are at the beck and call of powerful interests in our state enriching the connected and powerful and impoverishing the people," Pierce said. "Selma and I have listened to the people's hopes and dreams and aspirations and we are committed to helping To make those dreams come true."

Alley told Pierce he will support him for his run for governor.

"I would like to thank the citizens of Oregon for supporting me," Alley said. "I have had some amazing experiences walking across the state and meeting the people of the state, and I had a terrific message to juxtapose against Kate Brown's."

"I regret not being able to take on Kate Brown," he said.

Alley said Pierce's campaign outspent his and traveled more around the state. "He ran a better primary race, and the results show he ran a better primary race," Alley said.

With experience in state government and as a candidate for statewide office, Alley, 61, was the presumed frontrunner in the race for the nomination. The Lake Oswego businessman served as deputy chief of staff for former Gov. Ted Kulongoski and chaired the Oregon Republican Party.

But Pierce, 59, invested more than $1 million into his campaign to reach out to voters. When the Salem oncologist entered the race, he had almost no name recognition and no experience as an elected official. Alley, in contrast, had sought the GOP nomination for governor in 2010 and for state treasurer in 2008.

Brown earned the Democratic nomination with 84 percent of the vote. She defeated Ashland physician Julian Bell, Springfield professional driver Chet Chance, Walmart produce team member Kevin Forsythe of Newport, Portland home care worker Steve Johnson and Portland environmental engineer and attorney Dave Stauffer.

Liz Accola Meunier, a spokeswoman for Brown's campaign, said the governor had been focused on governing and serving the state but would now begin ramping up her campaign to defeat Pierce.

"Tonight, we are happy with the results on our side, and the governor is really looking forward to talking about her vision for moving the state forward and looking forward to having a chance to talk about her vision, and we believe when voters gets a chance to compare her to her opponent that they will choose her," Meunier said.

Avakian, Richardson to face off in November

By HILLARY BORRUD
Capital Press

SALEM — Oregon Labor Commissioner Brad Avakian appears to have won the Democratic primary for Oregon secretary of state.

As of 10:15 p.m., Avakian had 39 percent of the vote leading state Rep. Val Hoyle, D-Eugene, who had 33 percent and state Sen. Richard Devlin, D-Tualatin, with 27 percent, according to unofficial vote totals. The Associated Press called the race for Avakian.

Former state Rep. Dennis Richardson appeared to be winning the Republican primary with nearly 77 percent, and was declared the winner by The Associated Press. Lane County Commissioner Sid Leiken had 23 percent of the vote, according to unofficial totals.

Avakian and Richardson will face each other in the November general election. Richardson said Tuesday night that he was ready to campaign against Avakian based on their different views on the role of the secretary of state.

"Brad Avakian wants to investigate and go after private businesses," Richardson said, referring to Avakian's plan to have state auditors begin investigating complaints against state contractors. "My opinion is the secretary of state should be rolling out the red carpet to businesses in other states and countries, as well as in Oregon."

Richardson said the Audits Division in the Secretary of State's Office is supposed to review state programs in order to "show that the people's money is well spent and (Avakian's) approach will be to ignore the waste that is taking place in public departments and programs and go after private businesses."

Avakian, who fought to set himself apart as the most progressive politician in the Democratic primary, could not be reached for comment Tuesday night. In a press release statement, Avakian's campaign manager Brad Pyle described Richardson as an "extreme right wing" politician.

The Democratic primary remained contentious up until the 8 p.m. Tuesday election deadline, as the candidates increasingly went on the attack in an attempt to gain a lead in the tight race. Early on, Hoyle and Devlin critiqued Avakian for promising to create renewable energy and civics education programs, which are outside the secretary of state's role of chief elections officer, auditor and archivist.

Recently, Avakian and Devlin attacked Hoyle for accepting a $250,000 donation in April from billionaire gun control advocate Michael Bloomberg. Avakian's campaign accused Devlin of accepting campaign donations from groups that benefited financially from legislation Devlin championed.

And a week before the primary, Hoyle also faced an attack ad by the Humane Society that took her to task for killing a 2015 bill that would have banned sales of ivory and rhino tusks in Oregon.

Earlier this month, a poll commissioned by OPB and Fox 12 showed the three Democrats were in a dead heat. Avakian was expected to win 21 percent of the vote, Hoyle was second with 16 percent and Devlin had 13 percent, a margin of error of plus or minus 5.7 percent. Most of the remaining Democrats in the poll were undecided.

PENDELTON Council lifts EOCI work crew ban

East Oregonian

The Pendleton City Council repealed a nearly 30-year-old ban on Eastern Oregon Correctional Institution inmates working inside city limits.

While Mayor Phillip Houk said previous attempts to overturn the ban filled the council chambers with public opposition, everyone who testified Tuesday night urged the council to lift it.

"It was a different world then," Houk said.

Almost all of the nine people who spoke in favor of EOCI work crews were associated with the prison in some way, many of them former or current employees.

Between those nine people, they talked about the thoroughness of the work crew screening process, the rarity of job site walk-offs and how prison labor can benefit both the inmate and the community.

Bryan Branstetter, an

EOCI correctional officer and a former city councilor, said Oregon voters passed Measure 17, which requires state prisons to engage inmates with work opportunities and training.

"There's only so much work you can do inside the fence. It doesn't matter how good you are," he said.

Several current and former correctional workers recalled how some inmates used work crew and vocational program experience to gain employment after their release.

The council didn't need much convincing — shortly after Houk closed the public hearing, the council unanimously passed a resolution lifting the ban.

Under the resolution, EOCI will give the city a start date for when inmate work crews will begin working in Pendleton. A year after EOCI starts sending work crews out into the city, the city is required to evaluate the program.
