

A cemetery honoring Vietnamese soldiers, mostly unidentified, at Gio Linh. The government is using DNA testing to identify the soldiers who died while at war with the United States.

The remains of an ammunition cache near The Rockpile used by the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong. Villagers near the site scavenged the brass but left the lead rounds.

Former Army airborne officer Bob Durkin breaks down after telling about a fierce battle in the A Shau Valley. He is comforted by Marine Gene Miller, one of the tour guides for Vietnam Battlefield Tours.

A fisherman from the Lang Co village waits for a bite near Dam Lap An bridge in Vietnam.

Vietnam, revisited

Photos by Skip Nichols ♦ More photos and video online at www.eastoregonian.com

Pieces of American aircraft shot down in North Vietnam make a dramatic display at the War Memorial in Hanoi.

Paula and Skip Nichols, and Phuoc, carry two baby pigs purchased at Khe Sanh market for a Montagnard village near the old DMZ and the Laotian border.

Marine Bill Stilwagen walks through the shell-pocked second floor classroom at Bo De School near the DMZ.