DEAR ABBY

Mom's vacation plans cause headache for New York intern

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

Dear Abby: I recently received a very competitive internship in New York. I'm excited and can't wait to go. I have never been to New York, and my mom is driving me crazy over it.

She's using my internship as an excuse to go on vacation to "see me," even though I have told her multiple times that I won't be able to do anything with her because I'll be working full time. She doesn't have a car and expects to use mine, and she's constantly sending me information about stuff "we" can do in New York. It is overwhelming, and I'm getting very stressed out.

I just want to go by myself and have my own experience. We don't have that good a relationship. Would it be bad if I asked her not to come? — Stressed Out New Intern

Dear Intern: You have already told your mother — with whom you do not have a good relationship — that you will be busy. Repeat that message often. When she sends you literature about things you can do together, point out that your time must be devoted to one thing — your internship. If she makes reservations to come to New York, tell her you would prefer that she not come until your internship is finished, unless she's prepared to do all of the activities she's planning on her own.

Dear Abby: I am 24 and still a virgin. For the past 10 years I have had a vaginal infection. I'm scared that I can't have children. Because of this I have never allowed myself to date.

I'm terrified of going to a doctor. My father died of cancer when I was 17, and the thought of being diagnosed with cancer prevents me from going to get this looked at. I am very depressed about this and the stress is causing my hair to fall out. I need help, but I'm scared. What should I do? — Anonymous In Santa Barbara, Calif.

Dear Anonymous: You MUST see a doctor. If you need moral support, ask a trusted friend or relative to come with you. The only thing worse than dying of cancer would be to die of a disease that could have been cured had it been diagnosed early enough.

Although I am not licensed to practice medicine, allow me to suggest that if what you have is cancer, you would have known by now. That's why I'm urging you to act like the adult you are and talk to a gynecologist.

If you don't know of one or can't afford one, contact Planned Parenthood. It has clinics that provide the help you need. The caring people at Planned Parenthood will help you as they have helped many others, and they'll do it on a sliding payment scale, if necessary. Please let me hear from you again so I'll know you're OK.

Dear Abby: What's up with this beard trend? I am sick and tired of looking at unshaven men. It makes them look shaggy and not clean. I think that hairless faces should be the new trend. Let's clean up, please. Do you agree, Abby? — Joan In Florida

Dear Joan: As a woman who is married to a man with a beard, I refuse to answer on the grounds that it may incriminate me.

Miss Grace Hoch, popular Pendleton high school girl, sustained a fractured leg just above the ankle yesterday afternoon shortly before 4 o'clock when a violent wind storm blew down the temporary enclosure, which had been erected in front of The Peoples Warehouse, as she was passing by. Miss Hoch and her escort, Ned Fowler, well known high school athlete, were passing by the store just as a particularly strong gust of wind struck the building. The enclosure was torn loose and toppled over upon them. Young Fowler protected the young lady from the full force of the falling lumber but both were carried down. Miss Hoch was struck in such a way that both bones of the leg were broken. Passersby rescued the two from beneath the wreckage and J.F. Robinson took the young lady to her apartments in his auto and afterward to the hospital.

Interest in providing an industrial park in the northern section of Umatilla was expressed by councilmen in the session of the City Council this week when Vane Hiatt, in reporting for his housing and commerce committee, said two firms are looking at the Umatilla community. The councilman said inquiries have been received about sites, after being referred to the City Council by the Port of Umatilla. Corps of Engineers has 96 acres in the north section of Umatilla that will not be inundated by the formation of the John Day pool, and Councilman Hiatt said he would like to see all of that area turned over to the Port of Umatilla for development.

Bureau of Reclamation officials say releases from McKay Reservoir Sunday could not match the volume of water rushing into the lake, but residents along lower McKay Creek believe other factors are to blame for flooding downstream. Residents in Montee Addition, including members of the Lower McKay Creek Water Control District, want the answers to several questions — Who was monitoring the reservoir? Why wasn't water released earlier in the week? What happened to the reservoir space reserved for flood control? Ted Smith, who lives on Southwest 44th, was part of the original neighborhood group that approached the Bureau after the 1958 flood about setting aside space in the reservoir for flood control. "The Bureau got caught with their pants down. There's no other way around it. They can't alibi their way out of it," Smith said.
