The crime happened between last Friday and Wednesday at the dairy. The vehicle has no license plate and is not registered. The keys also were inside the pickup, which did have an attached welding unit.

5:38 p.m. - Children ages 3 and 5 playing in the road at Northwest Water and Minor streets, Heppner, prompted a complaint to the Morrow County Sheriff's Office. The children were gone by the time a deputy arrived, but he contacted the mother of the 3-year-old.

BUDGET: Includes 2.25 percent pay increase for all city staff

"We're just trying to save the street before it totally breaks down," Smith said.
Another $130,000 is budgeted for the West Highland Trail project, which will create a pedestrian/bike path parallel Highland Avenue from Riverfront Park to 11th Street. Construction on the joint project with the Oregon Department of Transportation is expected next spring.
The city has also budgeted $70,000 to purchase a bus and begin a Dial-a-Ride program to supplement the city's current public transportation program, which allows senior and disabled residents to purchase tickets from the city for $2 apiece that can be redeemed for a ride from a private taxi company.
"It's less of a subsidy to operate the Dial-a-Ride program than the taxi program," said Mark Morgan, assistant city manager.
After adopting a new logo and the tagline "Where Life is Sweet," the city plans to repaint the water tower on south Highway 395 and spend an additional $25,000 implementing the brand on letterheads, signs and other city items.

"We put $75,000 in the water budget to repaint — fully repaint — the water tower. All of it. At the same time," Smith said.
The budget also includes increased personnel costs, including a 2.25 percent pay increase for all city staff to match the raise negotiated by the police union.
One thing missing from the proposed budget is funds for construction of a skate park. While a small amount of money remains in the proposed budget for design purposes, Smith said the city is hitting the brakes on construction of the project in light of a recent court case that brought up some liability concerns.
Under Oregon's Public Use of Lands Act, landowners that let the public use their land free of charge for recreational purposes are protected from lawsuits if someone is injured on that land. But the Oregon Supreme Court recently ruled that a legally blind woman who fell into a hole in a Portland park could still sue the individual city employee who dug the hole and left it unattended.

"The city still technically has immunity, but our employees don't and we're obligated to defend them," Smith said.
As a result the city, under the advice of its insurance provider, is slowing down on the skate park idea until efforts by the League of Oregon Cities to get new legislation on the issue have played out.
One of the reasons the proposed 2016-2017 budget is smaller than last year's is that by July the millions of dollars in state money that the city has been holding for construction of the Eastern Oregon Trade and Event Center will be completely spent.

In the past year the city also completed construction of an outfall pipe for the new Recycled Water Treatment plant, worked with NOWA to make improvements to the regional water system, completed a water pipeline along Feedville road to the Hermiston Agricultural Research & Extension Center, performed most of a $4 million upgrade to the Hermiston Municipal Airport, improved Victory Square Park, expanded Sunset Park, created a drainage basin at Newport Park and made repairs to the Hermiston Family Aquatic Center.
The city council will hold a public hearing on the budget on June 13 at 7 p.m. at city hall before considering the budget for final adoption. A copy of the budget can be examined at city hall, 180 N.E. Second St.
