DEAR ABBY

Son's kindhearted parents feel victimized by girlfriend

Dear Abby: My husband and I have a 22-year-old son who has moved back home due to his relocating. His girlfriend of six months has done some suspicious and devious things. We have tried to overlook them, but the latest involves a car our son asked us to sell her because she was in a bind because of some stupid financial decisions she had made.

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

girlfriend in with you, put a stop to it now. If you don't, I predict you'll be taken advantage of as long as they're under your roof and until they move out — which may not be for the foreseeable future.

Dear Abby: I have a question about something you don't hear much about anymore. Do people still have mortgage-burning parties? If I had a party, do you think guests would feel like I was bragging because I have paid off my home and they haven't?

We felt sorry for her, so we sold her the car for LESS than half of what we could have gotten on a trade-in since we were going to purchase a newer car. Now, one month later, she has taken the car and traded it in on a different one, no doubt gaining the extra equity. I'm angry to the point that I no longer want her in my house. Are we wrong to feel taken advantage of?

Any advice would be great! — Just Happy In Maryland

I would add that we have always tried to help our only son as much as we can. The result has been that we have been taken advantage of or not treated the way we think a son should treat parents who are not exactly well off. Please don't reject this letter as your advice is really needed. — Steamed In The South

Dear Just Happy: Congratulations for having paid off your mortgage. However, unless your guest list is short and includes only people you are very close to, I'm not sure it would be appropriate to throw the kind of party you describe for exactly the reason you mentioned.

Dear Abby: My family doesn't seem to approve of my taste in who I date. I prefer to go with older guys, but I'm 14. My parents actually reported my last boyfriend to the police when they found out his real age. I am now with another guy in high school who respects me, but my parents don't approve of him either. What should I do? — Confused In Missouri

Dear Steamed: It appears your only son and his girlfriend may be birds of a feather. Both have taken advantage of your kindness and generosity in one way or another, and you have every right to be upset about it.

Dear Confused: Start concentrating on school, sports and group activities. In other words, wait to date until your parents agree you are old enough and you can find someone of whom they approve.

E.F. Averill, district inspector for the United States biological survey, this morning received word from A. R. Fisher, in charge of economic investigations, that he had been given an assistant in the person of Stanley C. Jewett of Portland. The news is most pleasing to Mr. Averill as Mr. Jewett is generally recognized as perhaps the best authority living on birds and animals of the northwest. For some time he has been making a biological survey of the state for the fish and game commission and prior to that was a collector for the scientific department of the U.S. biological survey. His title will be predatory animal inspector and Pendleton will be his headquarters.

Thursday's tour was a result of Jones' interest in obtaining study for the future development. Officials of BR from Boise, Portland and Spokane toured about 10,000 acres of federally owned north Morrow land in October to determine the feasibility of such a project. At that time farmers of that area objected, saying it would take too long to get the land under production. Jones stated Thursday that this may no longer be the case.

Request that the whole north end of Morrow County be placed in a major Bureau of Reclamation irrigation project was reiterated here Thursday following a tour of the area. Morrow County Judge Paul Jones wrote the Oregon congressional delegation May 12 regarding the potential for the large project under BR and sent a copy of his letter to the Spokane Bureau of Reclamation office.

Wrinkles in a prison blue jean factory here need to be ironed out so the program's success can be measured, members of the Oregon Criminal Justice Council said Monday. Three council members and two staffers spent about four hours touring Eastern Oregon Correctional Institution, focusing on the garment factory where inmates are being trained to sew blue jeans. Once the factory is up to speed, the council hopes to track inmates to measure the rate of recidivism, work opportunities outside the prison walls and the crime rate among those who have learned job responsibility. However, before the EOCI industries program can be evaluated, it must first work through "legal and bureaucratic issues" that involve trying to operate a state-financed program like a private business.
