A telephone message from Helix at 3 o'clock this afternoon brought the information that a cloudburst descended upon that town at about 2:30 and inundated the place. Water waist high was running through the streets, basements were full, sidewalks washed away, even automobiles swept for a distance and a good deal of other damage done. The railroad tracks were completely under water and the afternoon train is held there.

The American GI passing out gum to children in foreign counties during World War II was given as the reason Wednesday for the high demand for peppermint export production. Discussing growing by local farmers, following presentation of a program on agricultural resources at Hermiston Kiwanis Club Wednesday noon, Herman E. Bierman, County Extension Agent in the west end district, said peppermint is the number one field crop in demand today.

What does it feel like to have a dream come true? To Shawn Henrichs the situation is both exciting and scary. Henrichs saw his lifetime dream of playing professional baseball come true Friday night when he stepped onto the mound for the first time for the Everett Giants. Henrichs was the ace pitcher for Hermiston High School in 1989, leading them to the state Class AAA playoffs. After that he took his talents to Linn Benton Community College for two years where he helped that team win the NWAACC title this year. Shawn was drafted directly out of high school by the Montreal Expos, but declined their offers and went back into the draft, where after one year of college he was drafted again, this time by the San Francisco Giants. He elected to finish his college program at Linn Benton before going pro, but told the Giants that he would not re-enter the draft because he wanted to play for them.

DEAR ABBY Friend's growing confusion could be sign of dementia

JEANNE PHILLIPS
Advice

Dear Abby: I have a good friend I have traveled with for many years. The last few years she has been showing increasing signs of confusion and forgetfulness. She has difficulty managing her paperwork for travel and remembering what our plans are for the next day.

On the most recent trip she picked up other people's coats and insisted they were hers. My attempts to discuss this with her only made things worse and led to her accusing me of destroying her confidence. I believe this is the onset of dementia. How can I help her? — Noticing Things In California

Dear Noticing: You are describing a serious and progressive problem. If your good friend has a spouse, children or siblings, they should be notified about what you have observed.

If she has no one, then someone at Social Services or Adult Protective Services should be contacted before your friend gets herself into serious trouble by forgetting to pay her bills, or getting lost while driving her car.

Dear Abby: Have you any suggestions about letting go? A former friend is involved in a New Age sex group. He can no longer hold a casual conversation without expounding on their practices and "theology," as he considers it. My rational self understands that his life is his to do with as he wishes, but my emotional self grieves that he is distancing himself from family and friends.

I know I'm not my brother's keeper, but he was like a brother to me, and I blame myself that I was unable to reach him when this was merely something he was curious about instead of a radical new lifestyle. How do I accept that he's a lost cause and quit worrying about him? — Not My Brother's Keeper

Dear Not: Because you are having trouble accepting that your former friend is a "lost cause," view it as his having taken a different path than you have chosen. If you prefer not to hear about your friend's alternative lifestyle, you should say so.

If he respects your feelings, he will stick to subjects the two of you have in common and quit "expounding." If he can't do that, then recognize that as much as you might wish to, you can't live someone else's life, and then move on because friendships either evolve or they wither.

Dear Abby: My 16-year-old son and I are having a debate and would love your take on the matter. I think if you stand in a grocery store checkout line and read a magazine without buying it that it's stealing. He doesn't agree. What do you say? — Just Looking

Dear Just: If your son is reading the magazine from cover to cover, then I agree he's helping himself to something he's not entitled to. If he is only "sampling" to see if there are enough articles in the magazine that he thinks it's worth buying, I wouldn't call it theft. Using your yardstick, judging from the number of people I have seen at checkout counters with their noses buried in the tabloids, that would make us a nation of thieves.
