DEAR ABBY

Woman can't end office affair until she regains self-worth

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

Dear Abby: I met "Edward" at work six years ago. We were instantly attracted to each other and soon began an affair. We are both married to others.

self-worth, because as it stands, you cannot have both.

Dear Abby: Our daughter came home for spring break from college with troubling news. She has been sexually harassed by a very large and aggressive lesbian in her dorm this year. When the girl first came on to her, my daughter told her NO. Later, on two separate occasions, the girl pushed her to the floor and groped her in the lobby of the dorm.

I never thought I could stray outside my marriage, even though my marriage has been very lonely. I love Edward more than I ever thought possible, but even though he has strong feelings for me, he says he will never file for divorce from his wife.

My daughter was afraid to fight the girl because she's small. She was also afraid to report it — I guess she thought it was an isolated incident.

We are still involved, but I am heartbroken that he doesn't want me enough to leave her. He has never said that he loves his wife, just that he doesn't believe in divorce. I have never felt such a strong connection with anyone, ever!

Recently she found out that the girl has done the same thing to several other girls. They all went to the Title IX people on campus to file a complaint, but were told they won't get any answers until late summer, which is after school is out.

My head tells me to forget him, but my heart won't allow it. I am so sad and depressed that I can't function some days. How can I move past this man and regain my self-worth? — Need To Move Forward

Is this kind of harassment common in our schools? Should she take it to the campus police or city police? Our daughter really likes her college, but she shouldn't have to put up with this. — Troubling News

Dear Need To Move Forward: You wrote that your lover has never said he loves his wife. You think he has strong feelings for you, but has he ever defined them as "love?" Has it occurred to you that what he "loves" may be his financial net worth, and THAT is the reason he will never divorce his wife?

Dear Troubling News: I agree that your daughter — and the other girls — should not have to put up with being assaulted. I wish you had revealed a little bit more about what happened when the assaults were reported. Was the aggressor counseled? Warned to stay away from the girls she had harassed? Removed from the dorm?

I don't blame you for feeling sad and depressed. If I were you, I'd feel sad and depressed too. You have violated your own principles and are in a relationship that, much as you might wish it, will never bring you the validation you're looking for. When you start liking yourself again, you may find that you need him less. And that is when you'll end this affair and reconnect with your sense of

If nothing was done, before informing the police, I'm advising you to discuss this with a lawyer because a school that would ignore what happened may be liable.

DAYS GONE BY

100 Years Ago From the East Oregonian June 22, 1916

Heavy frosts have done considerable damage to both crops and gardens within the last two weeks at Ukiah. Completely killing grain and being followed by some very warm days after the frosts makes it very hard on the damaged crops. And unless we get rain soon hay crops here will be very short.

payment for foster care of $73 for teen-agers. The relatively high payment is expected to provide incentive for a couple to provide the home.

Scientists and researchers from around the nation have flocked to Boardman to try to get a better understanding of climate and how to predict its changes. The scientists are currently wrapping up three weeks of tests using thousands of pounds of measuring equipment spread over 100 square miles of sand, sagebrush and irrigated cropland. The project is the first research phase of a 10-year, $450 million study by the U.S. Department of Energy. The project is administered by Pacific Northwest Laboratory in Richland. The ARM — Atmospheric Radiation Measurement — project is intended to improve the accuracy of computer models for projecting global climate change.

A group home for teen-age boys, financed entirely by a federal program, won approval of the Umatilla County Public Welfare Commission Tuesday. Pat Eaton, welfare administrator, said the group home is needed because foster homes for teen-age boys are very difficult to find. The federal program provides that operators of the home will be paid a total of $181 a month for the care of each boy, far above the state and local
