A telephone message from Helix at 3 o'clock this afternoon brought the information that a cloudburst descended upon that town at about 2:30 and inundated the place. Water waist high was running through the streets, basements were full, sidewalks washed away, even automobiles swept for a distance and a good deal of other damage done. The railroad tracks were completely under water and the afternoon train is held there.

The American GI passing out gum to children in foreign counties during World War II was given as the reason Wednesday for the high demand for peppermint export production. Discussing growing by local farmers, following presentation of a program on agricultural resources at Hermiston Kiwanis Club Wednesday noon, Herman E. Bierman, County Extension Agent in the west end district, said peppermint is the number one field crop in demand today.

What does it feel like to have a dream come true? To Shawn Henrichs the situation is both exciting and scary. Henrichs saw his lifetime dream of playing professional baseball come true Friday night when he stepped onto the mound for the first time for the Everett Giants. Henrichs was the ace pitcher for Hermiston High School in 1989, leading them to the state Class AAA playoffs. After that he took his talents to Linn Benton Community College for two years where he helped that team win the NWAACC title this year. Shawn was drafted directly out of high school by the Montreal Expos, but declined their offers and went back into the draft, where after one year of college he was drafted again, this time by the San Francisco Giants. He elected to finish his college program at Linn Benton before going pro, but told the Giants that he would not re-enter the draft because he wanted to play for them.

DEAR ABBY Student pleads for help getting parents to co-sign for loan

Dear Abby: I have plans to go to law school in the next two years. I have already taken the entrance exam, and will receive recommendations from two of my college professors. The problem is, my parents are refusing to co-sign for my law school loan.

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

Abby, I'm not asking for money; I'm just asking for someone to co-sign the loan for me. I plan to pay off the debt myself. I don't want to ask an extended family member for help, because even if they agree, I'd feel horrible if it prevented them from helping their own children with something.

My parents don't have a good enough excuse to not co-sign for me, and it surprises me that it doesn't embarrass them that I may have to ask another family member for help. What should I do, Abby? — Future Law School Student

Dear Future Law School Student: Your parents shouldn't have to meet your criteria for what is a "good enough" excuse for being reluctant to co-sign on a loan for you. It should be enough that they are uncomfortable with the prospect of doing it.

While your desire to pursue the field of law is admirable, have you researched what job opportunities are available to new law school graduates? Currently, according to the media, these jobs are not nearly as plentiful as they have been historically.

However, if you are determined to plunge ahead, I think you already know what you're going to have to do — and that includes seeing if you can find another source of funding for your law school education.

Dear Abby: My boyfriend and I have been together a year and a half. We knew each other for a while prior because we used to work together. Our relationship has been somewhat fun. The only issue that bothers me is that he can never seem to open up. He doesn't express his feelings toward me or even show much that he cares that we're together.

When I ask him about it, he says he's just not ready to open up and I should respect that. I do, because he has been through a lot in life. But it's hard to figure out where I stand with him. I'm always the one to make the first move — whether it's to show affection or express my love for him. It's lonely and confusing that he doesn't, and I often feel like I'm in a relationship with myself.

Should I give him more time to get comfortable enough to open up? Or am I wasting my time? — Mixed Up In Love

Dear Mixed Up: Not all men are comfortable expressing their emotions verbally. More important than what someone tells you, is how he treats you. You stated that he not only doesn't express his emotions, but also doesn't show that he cares you are a couple. A year and a half has been plenty of time for your boyfriend to respond with more than indifference.

Because you need more than he seems capable of giving, it's time to find someone who can give you the affection and affirmation you crave. In a relationship, BOTH parties must contribute if it is to survive.
