Phelps locks up trip to 5th Olympics

By PAUL NEWBERRY
Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Michael Phelps is heading back to the Olympics.

So is Missy Franklin. Phelps, the most decorated athlete in Olympic history, held off a stiff challenge from Tom Shields to win the 200-meter butterfly at the U.S. swimming trials Wednesday night. Phelps whipped around to look at his time — a bit slower than he probably would've liked — and held up all five fingers on his right hand.

Yep, it's Olympics No. 5, making him the first male swimmer to compete in that many Summer Games.

Franklin, meanwhile, turned in one of the gutsiest performances of her career to earn a spot for Rio in the 200 freestyle. One night after she struggled to seventh in the 100 backstroke — an event she won four years ago in London — there was plenty of speculation that she'd be hard-pressed to qualify for any individual events at these games.

Franklin herself sounded as though she'd be happy just getting on the team as a relay swimmer.

Turns out, she'll be busier than that.

While Katie Ledecky romped to victory in the 200 free, earning a second individual event at the Olympics, Franklin rallied over the second half of the race to claim the second spot. Ledecky touched in 1:54.88, following up her easy victory in the 400 free.

Franklin was next at 1:56.18, edging out Leah Smith by just under a half-second. Allison Schmitt, the defending gold medalist, settled for fourth but that will at least be good enough to get another star from the London Games on the team as a relay swimmer.

Phelps, who retired after the last Olympics but soon reversed his decision, took the 200 fly in 1:54.84 — far off the world record of 1:51.51 he set at the 2009 world championships while wearing one of the high-tech suits that have since been banned.

NHL

Predators, Canadiens pull off blockbuster trade

Associated Press

The Nashville Predators pulled off a blockbuster before the start of free agency Wednesday by acquiring P.K. Subban from the Montreal Canadiens in exchange for Shea Weber, a swap of All-Star defensemen.

Subban won the Norris Trophy as the NHL's top defenseman in 2013 and had six goals and 45 assists last season before suffering an injury. The offensive-minded, dynamic 27-year-old has 63 goals and 215 assists in 434 career games, all with the Canadiens.

Montreal general manager Marc Bergevin said trading Subban is "one of the most difficult decisions" he has had to make.

"We completed today an important transaction which I am convinced will make the Canadiens a better team," Bergevin said. "P.K. Subban is a special and very talented player. He provided the Canadiens organization with strong performances on the ice and generous commitment in the community."

Subban had been involved in trade rumors dating back to when he signed a $72 million, eight-year contract in the summer of 2014. His no-movement clause that would've allowed him to block any trade would have kicked in on Friday.

Weber, who turns 31 on Aug. 14, had been with Nashville since the start of his NHL career in 2005.

The three-time Norris Trophy finalist was a team captain and had 20 goals and 31 assists last season.
