G.S. Andrus of Range, who has invented and received the patent on a new automobile wheel, has been in Ukiah for the last two weeks, making a set of the wheels which he is now demonstrating here and which seems to be a success. Mr. Andrus is also the inventor of the side hill plow, and has been a first class blacksmith and in spite of his three score years and ten he still does excellent work and we hope he will reap a bountiful harvest from his invention to aid him in his declining years.

Residents of Condon are used to seeing most anything on their city streets. But what they saw recently made most people blink twice. It was a handsome (if that is the correct word) six-foot-long boa constrictor wrapped many times around the arm of Lt. Jay Vaughn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Vaughn of Mayville. Vaughn, a 1965 West Point graduate, looked like the Pied Piper of Hamelin as he walked down the street with Clarence, the boa constrictor. Children followed him asking all sorts of questions about Clarence. Lt. Vaughn, who was home on leave prior to leaving for Viet Nam, said that while he was the owner of the snake, it actually belonged to all of C Company, 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry, part of the 4th Division. The company has been stationed at Ft. Lewis, Wash., until recently when it was ordered to Viet Nam, and Vaughn is hoping to sneak the snake aboard ship and keep it in his tent while deployed.

Dale Gronso soon will meet about 15,000 youth from more than 100 countries. The 14-year-old is among delegates to the World Jamboree for Boy Scouts scheduled next month at Sorak National Park on South Korea's east coast. The son of Mark and Gale Gronso will be a sophomore at Pendleton High School this fall. He is a member of Boy Scout Troop 777, sponsored by First Christian Church and led by scoutmaster Harold Nelson.

Man lassoes bear with head stuck in plastic container

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — A Colorado bed and breakfast owner armed with just a length of rope helped save a black bear with a giant plastic container stuck on its head.

Jim Hawkins got his lasso around the animal's midsection on the first throw. He said Thursday that he and the bear "did a rodeo thing for a while" before the animal figured out that Hawkins was the reason it couldn't run away.

That's when the bear went after Hawkins, leaving him with scrapes and a wound that needed stitches. It then scrambled up a tree, remaining there until officials arrived.

Carbondale District Wildlife Officer John Groves tells the Post Independent newspaper that officials tranquilized the bear and cut the container off its head.

It was released in the mountains and is expected to survive.

that relocating Pedals to an enclosure specifically designed for his needs in Otisville, New York, would be like "putting him in prison."

"This bear has managed by himself for at least the past three years," said Leaver. "He doesn't need any help. He's a magnificent example of how resilient wild animals are. What would be accomplished in removing this bear from the wild and placing him in captivity?"

Pedals has gone viral since he first surfaced two summers ago in Jefferson Township. Because of an injury to his front right leg and left front paw, Pedals walks with an unusual gait on his hind legs.

"I understand everybody caring about this animal or any injured animal," said Leaver. "But it's a bit of a knee-jerk reaction. The appropriate time to help this bear was when he was originally injured. Now, there's nothing medically that can be done. He has adapted. He just needs to be left alone."

Officials: Leave Pedals the upright walking bear alone

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — An injured black bear that walks upright and was spotted several times in New Jersey should be left alone, according to the executive director of a state-licensed wildlife refuge.

Tracy Leaver, executive director of the Woodlands Wildlife Refuge, told NJ.com

Dad's rough horseplay looks a lot like abuse

DEAR ABBY

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

Dear Abby: I am a grandmother and great-grandmother who is concerned about the behavior of my grandson toward his 7-year-old daughter, "Beth," and her 9-year-old cousin, "Mandy." When Mandy recently visited me, she told me her uncle crept up behind her, put his hand over her mouth and then held her nose so she couldn't breathe. She said he has done that to Beth, too.

Mandy said he held her like that until she felt faint and then let go, laughing. Apparently he does this "all in fun," but I see nothing funny about it. What would make someone do something like this? Mandy told me Beth is afraid of her dad and doesn't want to be left alone with him. I'm very concerned, but I live several states away and don't know what I can do. — Not Funny

Dear Not Funny: Your grandson has a bizarre sense of humor. That he would smother anyone — let alone a child — to the point of fainting is sadistic, bullying, abusive behavior.

Talk to the child's mother to see how she feels about this. If he would do this to a child, one can only imagine what he may be doing to her. She is the person to put a stop to this. If she can't manage that, then any child in the home should be living elsewhere.

Dear Abby: I'm the father of three beautiful, healthy children, with another due very soon. My wife is 36 weeks pregnant, and so far, so good. My wife is, well, perfect. We are not newlyweds and we have seen highs and lows, but she's the greatest mother I could have asked for my children.

The problem? She wants to induce her labor early. She figures the baby is healthy enough and just gaining weight from here on (her OB/GYN agrees). I know she has done enough and I want to support her decision, but I can't help thinking our baby girl will come when she is ready. I don't want to cause any ripples this late in the game. I just feel I'm on thin ice here and in the minority.

I don't want to drag my mom into this to prove a point! — Emotional Dad In California

Dear Emotional: If your wife's OB/GYN agrees that inducing your wife's labor early will not be harmful to the baby, and that's what your wife wants, then you are outvoted. While you might request a second medical opinion, I strongly advise against dragging your mother into this disagreement because if you do, it will cause resentment not only against you, but also your mother.

Dear Abby: I have a granddaughter who is getting married soon. If I give the couple money as a wedding gift, whose name should go on the check first, the bride's or the groom's? — Grandpa In Iowa

Dear Grandpa: If your granddaughter and her fiancé intend to have separate checking accounts, put her name on the check. However, if they will be opening a joint account after the wedding, it would make sense to put both of their names on it, and the order in which you list the names is whichever you prefer.
