DAYS GONE BY

100 Years Ago From the East Oregonian Aug. 13-14, 1916

Forcible bathing was again employed last night upon Jess Bowlsby, well known local young man who a year ago was subjected to a similar indignity. He was seized about 10 o'clock last night by thirty young men who held the impression that Bowlsby has a distinct aversion to the institution of the bath. The seizure took place on West Webb and Garden streets, he was carried several blocks, deposited in an auto, hurried to Round-Up Park and there forced to disrobe and scrub himself in the water of the receiving basin for the irrigation system of the park. When seized he was in the company of his brother, Clarence, and the latter put up battle in his defense. However, he was pitted against too great odds and retreated when threatened with the same treatment in store for his brother. He tried to locate the police and failing, is said to have secured a gun with which he threatened some of the members of the "bath brigade" after they had returned to town.

50 Years Ago From the East Oregonian Aug. 13-14, 1966

Moro, a new variety of rust-resistant wheat, planted with a lot of fanfare last fall, proved at harvest time that it has what it takes to produce in the poorer wheat growing areas of Eastern Oregon.

Moro's parents are an odd-looking Turkish variety and Omar. It gained rust resistance from its Turkish "dad" while retaining the figure of its Omar "mother." A new, white club wheat, prized for its fine milling characteristics, was developed by Dr. Charles Rohde of the Pendleton Branch Experiment Station as a possible replacement for Omar, a popular variety which was dealt a crippling blow in the early 1960s by striped rust disease.

25 Years Ago From the East Oregonian Aug. 13-14, 1991

About 60 acres of wheat and an estimated 140 acres of grass burned on the Hilmer Horn ranch near Pilot Rock Tuesday. Pilot Rock Fire Chief Ron Neely said it appears the fire was started by equipment Horn was using to rake straw, which he planned to bale. No one was injured. And near Heppner, about 20 acres of wheat and another 130 acres of grass burned after a combine struck power lines and ignited a fire on property owned by Dale Turner and Lyle Peck. The driver of the combine was not injured. Morrow County Grain Growers sent an airplane to drop water and ground tankers to fight the blaze with about a dozen Heppner volunteers and several ranchers pitching in. The battle lasted about two hours, said Allen Burkenbine, volunteer with the Heppner Fire Department.

DEAR ABBY

Mother of the bride resists overtures from groom's mom

JEANNE PHILLIPS
Advice

Dear Abby: I am recently engaged, and both my fiancé and his mother keep trying to set up "play dates" between his mom, my mom and me. I understand this may be a social norm so the mothers of an engaged couple can get to know each other during the engagement. However, my mom wants nothing to do with these dates.

Mom works long hours in the medical field. When she isn't working, she's frequently baby-sitting my sister's children. When she has free time, she enjoys being alone and reading a good book. This is her ideal way to spend her time, and she doesn't want to "hang out" with anyone but my dad. I have explained this more than once to my fiancé, yet he and his mom still try to set up meetings.

In defense of my mom, she and my fiancé's mother have known each other longer than my fiancé and I have known each other. They live about a mile apart and have met many, many times. I don't understand why more meetups are necessary.

It's getting to the point where I wish they'd stop asking my mom to do things, because I always have to awkwardly say no. Must I drag Mom somewhere I know she'd rather not be, or should my fiancé let this go? — Too Much Togetherness

Dear Too Much: Marriage is supposed to be a blending of two families, which may be why your fiancé and his mother are so persistent. However, you should not be a message carrier and feel stuck in the middle because it isn't fair to you.

Tell your fiancé that if his mother wants to get together with yours, she should call your mother herself. That way your mom can explain directly that because of her busy schedule — and her short list of priorities — she is not available.

Dear Abby: I'm a single father raising my four children alone. My problem may seem trivial and minor, but it's extremely taxing for me. My kids refuse to stop talking during my very brief television/movie time.

I work full time and take care of them by myself, and my two-hour escape via a movie or TV show is constantly interrupted. When I point out that what they are doing is rude and even disruptive, I am met with accusations that I "don't care about them" or "You love TV more than me." They somehow turn my anger around to their benefit. Please help. — Me Time In Florida

Dear Me Time: Welcome to parenthood! It's a 24-hour-a-day job, seven days a week.

You didn't mention how old your children are, but if they are under the age of 13, they should have a regular bedtime. Once they are in bed, you can have your "me time." However, if they are older, then accept that teenagers may need to communicate with their dad about things that are important, and it is more important to be available to them than to watch television every night.

P.S. Suggestion: Perhaps you can record or stream your shows and watch them at a later time when your kids don't need you.
