 Ibanez agreed to a sobriety test, according to state police, and showed "multiple clues of impairment." The trooper arrested Ibanez and took him to the Milton-Freewater Police Department, where his blood-alcohol level was .16 percent, two times the legal limit.

 Police also found Ibanez had four previous arrests for DUI. State court records show he pleaded no contest to DUI in 2011 and completed a diversion program, which led to the dismissal of that case.
