American Bar Foundation
honors O’Hanlon

PENDLETON — Timothy J. O’Hanlon, a Pendleton attorney, has been elected to the Fellows of the American Bar Foundation.

An honorary organization of lawyers, judges and legal scholars, those elected are recognized for outstanding dedication to the welfare of their communities and to the highest principles of the legal profession. Nominated by their peers and elected by the foundation board, membership is limited to one percent of lawyers in each jurisdiction.

O’Hanlon

O’Hanlon is owner of O’Hanlon Law Offices, doing business as Mautz & O’Hanlon. His practice focuses on civil and business litigation, business law and organization, agricultural law, insurance law, real estate, probate, conservatorship and guardianship issues and personal injury.

Created by the American Bar Association more than 60 years ago, the American Bar Foundation is a nonprofit organization dedicated to advancing justice and the understanding of law and its impact on society. It conducts large-scale research projects on the most pressing issues facing the legal system in the United States and the world.

Mautz & O’Hanlon is located at 101 S.E. Byers Ave., Pendleton. For more information, visit www.mautzetal.com/home/4332355. For more about the American Bar Foundation, visit www.americanbarfoundation.org.

Temp agency to lease space in East Oregonian building

HERMISTON — A Hermiston business that started in a garage in November has already grown out of its first home.

Jiovanni Staffing LLC will be renting the back office of the Hermiston Herald/ East Oregonian building at 333 E. Main St. in Hermiston. The business is a “temp-to-hire” model that provides temporary labor to companies with an eye on getting employees permanent placements at those companies when an opportunity comes available.

Jaime Ruelaz said he named the business after his son. He and his father started it last November with two employees and one client. Now after relying solely on word of mouth and Facebook he said they have more than 50 employees available for temp jobs and six local businesses that use them. As a result, Ruelaz said he felt the time was right to move into a more legitimate-looking office space and start doing things like joining the Chamber of Commerce.

He said the staffing agency mostly focuses on factory and warehouse work. Interested businesses and employees can contact Ruelaz at 541-571-9682 or via the Jiovanni Staffing LLC Facebook page.

Assisted Living Week kicks

Downfall of Hanjin tale of chaebol woes

SEOUL, South Korea — South Korea’s top ocean shipping company, Hanjin Shipping Co., is in bankruptcy proceedings following years of losses, as its family-dominated controlling conglomerate struggles to adapt to an era of slowing growth.

Founder Cho Choong Hoon started a trucking business in 1945 and made a fortune hauling supplies for U.S. forces during the Vietnam War. The conglomerate, or chaebol, he built helped drive the country’s ascent as a major economy, Asia’s fourth-largest. Among other businesses, it owns South Korea’s biggest airline, Korean Air Lines.

To many South Koreans, Hanjin’s woes are typical of the difficulties chaebol are facing as offspring of the founding generation fumble in their attempts to keep control of their fathers’ and grandfathers’ business empires.

Since Cho’s son Yang-ho took over in 2014, Hanjin Group has spent $1.07 billion trying to save the troubled shipping company, which has foundered as freight rates have tanked due to weak demand and soaring global capacity.

The younger Cho took over management of Hanjin Shipping from Choi Eun Young, the wife of his younger brother, who ran the shipping firm until his death in 2006. After a brief respite following the global financial crisis, the company slid back into the red in 2011.

“Without expertise or understanding of the industry, she was appointed as the CEO only because she was a relative,” Lee Ji-soo, an attorney at Law & Business Research Center in Seoul, said of Choi’s time at the helm. “It is a typical chaebol story.”

Earlier this week, creditors led by the Korea Development Bank rejected a plan by Hanjin Group to spend another $447.2 million to rescue the shipping firm, way short of Hanjin Shipping’s more than $5.37 billion in debts. Some commentators urged the Cho family to sell off some of their own properties to help save the company.

A report on the company’s financial status is due by Sept. 28, the local Yonhap News Agency reported, citing the Seoul Central District Court.

The Hanjin group suffered a severe blow to its reputation in 2014 when Cho Hyun-ah, Cho Yang-ho’s daughter and a vice president of Korean Air, threw a tantrum over how macadamia nuts were served to her on a flight and ordered the plane she was on to return to the gate at John F. Kennedy Airport in New York.

Cho Hyun-ah was given a suspended sentence for assaulting a crew member. She resigned her post at Korean Air.

Apart from troubles with its management, Hanjin is operating in a brutally competitive, consolidating industry, where profits are being squeezed as shipping rates fall while capacity continues to climb.

Even the biggest ocean shipping company, A.P. Moller-Maersk, is seeing its profits fall, and scrambling to cut costs.

Smaller operators like Hanjin, which with 618,133 TEUs, or Twenty-foot Equivalent Units, of container capacity is in the lower tier of the top 10 shippers, cannot muster the scale needed to get by.

“Korean shipping companies have suffered large losses, largely because charter rates on leased vessels were fixed in 2010 at a high level while actual shipping rates have fallen,” Nomura International analyst Young Sun Kwon in Hong Kong said in a research note.

Weak global trade volumes mean shippers are hauling fewer containers, he said.
