Philomath cancels season after hazing scandal

EO Media Group

PHILOMATH — Shaken by a hazing scandal, Philomath will not play varsity football this season.

The Philomath School Board canceled the season at a meeting Thursday night, but will allow some junior varsity game to be played, the Corvallis Gazette-Times reported.

Six varsity players have been cited with the juvenile equivalent of harassment and assault charges from an incident at the team's conditioning camp in July. A volunteer assistant coach is also facing a criminal mistreatment charge.

Benton County District Attorney John Haroldson said 11 freshman players had intimate parts of their bodies targeted during an initiation.

All football activities were suspended during the investigation and players didn't resume practice until this week. Superintendent Melissa Goff told board members that three outside experts evaluated the practices to determine the readiness of the athletes to play.

“They unanimously agreed that we do not have the readiness to have a varsity program,” she said.
