WEDDING: Couple met at Blue Mountain Community College

kind of neat that in the significant year I'm a big part of it."

The only practice the couple had took place a week prior, during a dress rehearsal with some of the show actors. According to Brown, their wedding was rehearsed as much as any other part of Happy Canyon, but the one thing they couldn't simulate was the crowd.

"He's so used to being in the show it was nothing to him," O'Flaherty said. "But I think at rehearsal it kind of hit me like, 'OK, those stands are probably going to be full.' The nerves hit me as I walked out for rehearsal."

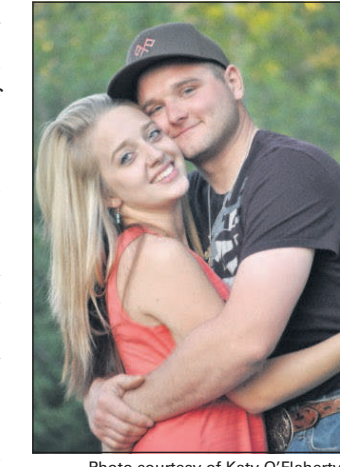

But as it turned out, the wedding went smoothly. Joined by three bridesmaids and groomsmen, their oldest daughter and flower girl, Ava, Katy's father, Tracy, and a full frontier town of actors, the couple were married by Reverend Roger Harwerth of the Pendleton First Presbyterian Church. Brown and his father, Jeff, got in touch with the centennial Round-Up directors and were able to wear their tombstone black dress coats for the groom and groomsmen.

"It went off without a hitch," Brown said afterward.

The couple met at Blue Mountain Community College through mutual friends. They've been engaged for nearly two years, but when their second daughter Macy was born, O'Flaherty's efforts to plan a wedding were halted. It was around that time that Rob Burnside, a Happy Canyon director of eight years, and his wife, Ann, approached the couple with an idea to have a Happy Canyon wedding. O'Flaherty was hesitant at first, in part because she wasn't familiar with the history of the pageant. But she warmed up to the idea as she learned more about.

Tyler Brown waves to the crowd as he rides out of the Happy Canyon Arena in a carriage with new wife Katy O'Flaherty on Friday during the Happy Canyon Night Show in Pendleton.

After nearly two years of engagement, Tyler Brown and Katy O'Flaherty were married Friday during a special inclusion in the Happy Canyon Night Show.

"They were good about making sure it was still going to be memorable for us and not 10 years down the road going 'Why didn't we just have a real wedding?'" O'Flaherty said. "(They) made it a lot easier to open my mind to it."

Jones and the rest of the Happy Canyon board tried to keep the wedding a secret as close to the show as possible, but publicity director Corey Neistadt said "keeping it a secret was like trying to keep jets a secret on Round-Up Saturday."

Still, much of the audience, in addition to Brown and O'Flaherty's guests, were unaware of the wedding until it happened Friday night. After the hick band drew laughs from the crowd, the announcer introduced the soon-to-be-wed couple.

"Back in 1915, a couple was married as part of the Happy Canyon show," he said. "Tonight we are going to honor that tradition 101 years later, and ask you to join us in celebrating the wedding of a couple Happy Canyon volunteers."

O'Flaherty had 25 family and friends make the trip from her hometown Bellingham, Washington, while Brown's extended family of 15 came from Jordan Valley. In addition to their wedding Friday, Brown and O'Flaherty plan to have receptions in Pendleton and Bellingham for those who couldn't attend.

As their whirlwind wedding came to a close, a horse-drawn wagon pulled up to the set. O'Flaherty and Brown stepped in, circled the arena a couple times and rode off the set into history, staking claim as only the second ever couple to be wed at Happy Canyon.

It might be another 100 years before Happy Canyon hosts another.

with the owners first, but if all else fails, Clark will load them up on the back of his trailer and haul them to one of several city lots where they can be picked up later — free of charge.

Most people leave their cars because they don't want to drink and drive, Clark said. That's a big reason why Blue Mountain Towing, in partnership with the city, does not charge impound fees leading up to the parade. Clark said they don't want to punish anyone for being safe.

Still, the show must go on.

"Everybody wants a parade," Clark said.

The air is chilly while Clark makes his early morning laps, dressed in a black cowboy hat and dark leather jacket. His backup includes Dave Lindell, of Lindell's Auto Salvage, and Tanner Bellamy, both of whom
