Martha Helen Magoon

Pendleton
October 23, 1929-November 2, 2016

Martha Helen Magoon died Tuesday, November 2, 2016, in Pendleton, Oregon, after a long illness.

She was born in Little Rock, Arkansas, on October 23, 1929, to Doris and Larry Ward. She was the third of five children. Her father Larry was disabled in WWI. Martha spoke often of the hardships of her childhood and of her mother, who worked tirelessly to provide for and keep the family together.

She and Frank later joined his parents, working and living on a small farm on the Loop Road near Stanfield. It was there that they had their four children. In 1960, the family left the farm and moved to Echo. Martha worked for a short time at the (then) State Hospital in Pendleton.

After she divorced, Martha met and married Elton L. Fraser. They moved to Stanfield, and had another child. During this time she worked various jobs, mostly in food service. In 1970, she married Bill L. Magoon, and they resided in Umatilla County and Jackson County. They traveled extensively, and were able to visit many places in the states. Bill died in October 2001.

Gerald Michael 'Jerry' Reed

June 15, 1935-November 4, 2016

G.M. (Jerry) Reed, longtime Oregon newspaper publisher and past president of A.N.R. (American Newspaper Representatives), representing weekly and daily newspapers throughout the United States, and past president of the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association died November 4, 2016.

Mr. Reed was born in Portland, Oregon, on June 15, 1935, to George Walter Reed and Mary Louise Reed. Mr. Reed began his newspaper career in Camas, Washington, as the fifth man on a five-man advertising staff. On September 16, 1961, he married Dolores Thompson Bartlett, who was the advertising manager in Camas at the time.

In 1965, Reed became publisher of the Itemizer Observer newspaper in Dallas, Oregon, working for the ex-governor Elmo Smith. In 1970, Reed bought a half interest in the Hermiston Herald in Hermiston, Oregon, and became publisher. He bought the remaining half from Marge Bartlett in 1975. The Hermiston Herald, in 1970, was a three-employee, eight-page hot type newspaper that grew to be the largest once-a-week, independently owned newspaper in the Pacific Northwest, averaging 40 broadside pages each week. Two newsmen who began their careers under Reed's tutelage in Hermiston later went on to win Pulitzer prizes for their outstanding writing abilities.

By 1980, the Herald and his former newspaper, the Itemizer Observer in Dallas, Oregon, had won first place in the Oregon Newspaper Publishers General Excellence category no less than four times. During his long newspaper career Reed was invited to the White House and met with four past presidents: Carter, Reagan, Nixon and Ford. He was a featured speaker throughout the United States on newspaper advertising. The Hermiston Herald went on to win numerous national newspaper awards during his publishing career.

In 1978, Reed and two other weekly publishers took five corporations and rolled them into one corporation that became Eagle Newspapers, with three primary stockholders: Reed, Dick Nafsinger of Hood River, Oregon, and Denny Smith of Salem, Oregon. Eagle went on to acquire other newspapers throughout Oregon, Washington and Idaho. By 1984 Eagle Newspapers owned and operated a total of 18 once- and twice-a-week newspapers.

In 1984, after acquiring the Post Publications in Camas, Washington, his wife of 25 years, Dolores, died suddenly of cancer; she was 48 years old. Reed left Eagle later that year and went back to Hermiston, Oregon, as owner-operator of the Hermiston Herald.

In 1987, Reed married Penny Harris, the former office manager of the Post Publications in Camas, Washington. The Herald continued to be a dominant weekly newspaper in Oregon and the Pacific Northwest. Reed sold the Hermiston Herald to Westcom Publishing in December of 1991.
