Judge: Climate change lawsuit can proceed

Associated Press
SEATTLE — A lawsuit filed by young climate activists who contend the U.S. government is failing to protect them from the harmful effects of greenhouse gas emissions can move forward, a federal judge in Oregon ruled Thursday.
U.S. District Judge Ann Aiken in Eugene denied motions by the federal government and trade groups representing big energy companies to dismiss the lawsuit. They had argued that lawmakers and federal agencies, not by the court, should determine climate change policy.
The plaintiffs, including 21 youths and climate scientist James Hansen, allege the federal government has known for decades that carbon pollution causes climate change but has failed to curb greenhouse gas emissions.
They argue that the federal government's actions violate their constitutional rights to life, liberty, and property, and the government has violated its obligation to hold certain natural resources in trust for future generations.

Julia Olson, lead attorney for the plaintiffs, called the judge's ruling significant and said the young activists are preparing for trial.
The federal case is among a series of similar lawsuits, including one in Seattle, filed by youth plaintiffs working with Our Children's Trust, a nonprofit environmental group based in Eugene.
"This case is the most significant in terms of the defendants. It's the United States, which is most responsible for causing climate change and the country best positioned to lead the world away from fossil fuels," said Olson, who is the group's executive director.
The U.S. government as well as the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Fuel & Petrochemical Manufacturers and the American Petroleum Institute, which intervened in the case, asked that the case be thrown out.

After U.S. Magistrate Judge Thomas Coffin denied their motions to dismiss, the government and trade groups filed objections. The case then went before Aiken, who on Thursday adopted Coffin's recommendations and findings, allowing the case to proceed.
In her ruling, Aiken wrote that "this action is of a different order than the typical environmental case" and she also noted that "a deep resistance to change runs through defendants' and intervenors' arguments for dismissal."
The plaintiffs are seeking a court order that requires the government to create a plan to dramatically slash greenhouse gas emissions released by the burning of fossil fuels.
A message to the U.S. Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., and lawyers representing the trade associations were not immediately returned.

House members send letter opposing dam breaching

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — U.S. Rep. Dan Newhouse and numerous other Republican lawmakers have sent a letter opposing the removal of four dams on the Snake River to restore wild runs of salmon.
The lawmakers sent the letter on Thursday to members of the House Appropriations Committee, asking that money be retained in the federal budget to operate the dams. Newhouse represents central Washington.
The House in previous years adopted language that prohibits and use of federal funds to remove any federally-owned or operated dam.

A federal judge recently ordered the government to study breaching the four dams to restore diminished runs of wild salmon.
The four dams are located on the Snake River between the Tri-Cities and Pullman and produce about 5 percent of the electricity in the Northwest.
Trump protests close freeways in Portland
PORTLAND (AP) — Officials say demonstrators against President-elect Donald Trump in Portland have shut down area freeways.
Hundreds showed up to Pioneer Courthouse Square in the downtown area Thursday evening.

BRIEFLY

Oregon Department of Transportation officials said portions of Interstate 5 and Interstate 84 were closed after protesters began marching. Officials urged travelers to use caution and watch for people in unexpected places on roads.
Portland Police tweeted to those stuck in traffic near demonstrations to stay in their vehicles, remain calm and refrain from engaging people as they pass by.
Portland Mayor Charlie Hales said earlier in the day he supports the peaceful protest of people exercising their Constitutional rights, but cautioned that walking on to freeways and blocking light rail lines is dangerous for everyone involved.
KOIN-TV reports one protester was arrested Wednesday for throwing a Molotov cocktail into a bonfire.

Students accused of making threats at Trump rally

SALEM (AP) — Two students from Silverton High School have been suspended after a pro-Trump demonstration.
The Statesman Journal reports that more than 30 students gathered Tuesday to support Donald Trump. Students waived Trump signs, American flags and at least one Confederate flag.
Principal Justin Lieuallen says the students were expressing their opinions, though in a couple incidents were students overstepped their bounds.
Witnesses say the students said "pack your bags, you're leaving tomorrow" and "tell your family goodbye" to Hispanic students.

Democrats still control Ore. legislature; lose a seat

By ANDREW SELSKY
Associated Press
SALEM — Republicans, by the thinnest of margins, managed to grab one seat from the Democrats in the Oregon Senate, while the ratio remained the same in the state House.
Results from the 2016 general election enable Democrats to still dominate the Legislature, though they are one seat short of a supermajority in each chamber that would have enabled them to pass laws more easily.
The Democrats' one-seat loss in the Senate, which also cost the party its supermajority there, was of the seat previously occupied by Sen. Alan Bates, who died of an apparent heart attack Aug. 5 while on a fishing trip.
Retired Southern Oregon University administrator Kevin Talbert is filling in the remainder of the term until January of the seat representing the 3rd District in southwestern Oregon.
Former Ashland mayor and car dealership owner Alan DeBoer, a Republican, gets to go to the Oregon State Capitol for the next legislative session by edging out Democratic candidate Tonia Moro by only 1 percent, or 535 votes.
"It's going to be a challenge going up there," DeBoer was quoted as saying on KOBI, a TV channel in Medford. "We'll be in the minority, and the Democrats will still have control. But I'm used to that, working across party lines, and I think we can accomplish some things."

The loss of Bates' former seat to the Republicans dropped the Democrats' control of the Senate from 18-12 to 17-13 seats. The Democrats maintained their 35-25 edge in the House, one short of a supermajority there.
Another close Senate race was in the 5th District along the central coast, where incumbent Arnie Roblan, a Democrat, held on with only a 1 percent margin, beating Republican Dick Anderson by only 294 votes, according to the secretary of state's office.
In the House of Representatives, the closest race was in the 51st District, with newcomer Janelle Bynum, an African-American, edging Republican Lori Chavez-Dereemer by 2 percent. Incumbent Democrat Shemia Fagan didn't run for re-election.
Oregon voters returned a record 2.02 million ballots in the Nov. 8 general election, Secretary of State Jeanne P. Atkins announced on Thursday.
The previous record was 1.84 million ballots returned for the 2008 general election.
The return figure accounted for 78.9 percent of all ballots mailed to eligible voters. That is fewer, however, than the 82.8 percent voting rate in 2012 and 85.7 percent in 2008.
