

Working as a photographer and model/3C

Bucket list trip to Bora Bora/4C

Fort Rock a geologic marvel /8C

Andy Nelson/The Register-Guard via AP
A South Eugene High School student holds signs during a march demonstrating for peace, harmony and unity after the highly divisive 2016 presidential election, Wednesday in Eugene. The students marched to the Erb Memorial Union on the University of Oregon campus and then to Broadway Plaza in downtown Eugene.

Andy Nelson/The Register-Guard via AP
South Eugene High School student Sylvani Starchild-St.Clair listens to speakers while demonstrating for peace, harmony and unity.

Stephanie Yao Long/The Oregonian via AP
Protesters walk in the middle of traffic lanes after Donald Trump's election victory in downtown Portland. Police made no arrests during Tuesday night's post-election protest.

Chris Pietsch/The Register-Guard via AP
A volunteer reaches to pick up a photo cutout of Hillary Clinton after it fell to the ground during cleanup at the end of a Democrat watch party on election night at Whirled Pies in Eugene.

Brian Davies/The Register-Guard via AP
Robin Bernik, who recently moved to Oregon from Florida, watches as her home state is called for Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump at a Republican watch party at the Vet's Club in Eugene.

Trump wins, Oregon reacts

Donald Trump's election night win surprised many Oregonians, and led to protests the following day in Portland and Eugene. About 39 percent of voters in the state cast a ballot for Trump, according to the Secretary of State's office.

Andy Nelson/The Register-Guard via AP
Supporters for Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton react as Florida is called for Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump during a Democratic Party election party at Whirled Pies in Eugene on Tuesday. Clinton won Oregon in the presidential contest.

Collin Andrew/The Register-Guard via AP
Protesters opposed to the election of Donald Trump gather at the Knight Library on the University of Oregon campus in Eugene early Wednesday morning.