

DELIVERY: Speed is the deciding factor in most crashes in winter weather

good tires on her four-wheel drive Jeep Cherokee Laredo, and the harshest winter weather in Pendleton has not made her sweat. She is from Hermiston, but after high school spent a couple years in Bend, where the average annual snowfall is about 24 inches, 9 more than what Pendleton gets.

Other drivers riding their back bumpers, they said, can be a greater hassle than slick roads. Hiatt said she pulls over to let people pass.

“Be my guest,” she said. “I’m not going to risk my vehicle just so they can go the speed they want to go.”

Neither were big fans of the city’s use of gravel to help cars gain traction on the snowy roads. The pebbles and grit can be just as much a pain to drive on as ice, they said.

Elite Taxi owner and operator Rod Johlke of Pendleton also said his business receives a spike in demand. The company has six vehicles rolling, all with studded tires and front-wheel drives, he said, and during a snow storm each driver probably handles 30-40 rides in a 10-hour span.

“I will say we have a crew of experienced drivers,” he said. “I would probably feel really reluctant to allow a rookie to go out in this.”

Snow days also mean customers can wait 30 minutes or more before a ride shows up, and getting places is going to take longer. Passenger safety has to come first, Johlke said, but the company also must take care of its vehicles. One driver sliding off the road creates a bottleneck for service.

Black ice is about the only condition Elite Taxi draws a line on. Johlke said the risk then is too great, and in 35 years of taxi service the business has not had a winter accident that resulted in an injury.

Though a few cars have needed help out of a ditch.

That was the case Tuesday morning for Umatilla County Fire District 1’s Medic 21 ambulance. Fire chief Scott Stanton said the crew was on a run and headed up the hill at Salmon Point off Highway 730. Thick ice covered the road.

“They almost made it to the top of the hill,” Stanton said, “but when they came back down, they ended up skidding and slid off the road.”

Stanton drove his command vehicle to help and found the emergency hauler teetering on the edge of steep ditch, its rear wheels over the embankment and the passenger side front tire about a foot off the ice-covered road.

The ambulance was ready to roll over.

Amazon makes first drone delivery

ATLANTA (AP) — Drone delivery has begun.

On Dec. 7, a bag of popcorn, along with an Amazon Fire TV stick, left a Cambridge warehouse in the U.K. and 13 minutes later, both were accepted by an Amazon customer, one of two who had agreed to be part of the test program.

A video posted by Amazon shows a fully autonomous drone, no humans involved, taking off from the warehouse and flying over fields to deposit the package just outside the customer’s home.

Amazon, with drones, aims to make deliveries in 30 minutes or less. Packages must weigh five pounds or less and can only be delivered during the day and in clear weather. The Seattle-based company plans to expand the trial to hundreds of users.

Stanton said he tried to use his vehicle’s winch to right the ambulance, but the effort did not pan out.

“We had to get a full tow truck to get them on the road,” he said.

The vehicle sustained minor damage, he said, but after swift repairs the rig was ready to go.

Stanton said slide-offs and the like don’t happen often to emergency vehicles. Many have four-wheel drive, he said, and the fire district also relies on tire chains. Crews lay those out ahead of time as the weather dictates and can take 20 minutes to wrap them around tires.

Ambulance and fire engine drivers also undergo a 16-hour driving class, he said, and about every other year the Oregon Department of Public Safety Standards and Training brings out a “skid avoidance truck” to continue driver training.

That vehicle, according to department information, is a 20,000 pound Ford F-650 crew cab truck with a tire rack and attachment for pulling a trailer all inside wheeled frames to help simulate dangerous road conditions.

“It’s an amazing prop,” Stanton said. “A lot of our drivers have been through that training, too.”

Stanton said from a first-responder point of view, speed is the deciding factor in most crashes in winter weather. Sure, a snow storm can reduce visibility and the winter means more hours of darkness, he said, but all of that adds up to a need to slow down.

LOAN: Data center project considering options in obtaining enough power to run facility

Patterson estimates it would cost between $250,000 and $350,000 — a lack of which recently prevented a trucking distribution warehouse from locating in Pendleton, city manager Robb Corbett said.

“What the state has told us time and time again is having the infrastructure there is worth much more than a promise that we’ll build it,” he said.

North of the airport, the city’s master plan also calls for utility extensions for an unmanned aerial systems industrial park, but that will have to wait until the city can get a separate environmental assessment for compliance with the Federal Aviation Administration, which would cost an additional $169,825.

Corbett delivered utility news of a different sort to the council, giving them an update on Makad Corp.’s data center project on Airport Road.

The city manager said Makad is still considering its options in obtaining enough power to run the facility.

“There’s a minimum amount of power that is available to them, which is roughly 20 percent of what the overall build-out of the data center could be,” he said. “There’s a path forward for them to be able to expand, but even then, they have to make enhancements to the area. ... I think the cost, without adding additional power to the city, is several million dollars.”

According to Corbett, Makad is looking at other options like a natural gas generator that could supply power.

“If it’s 2 (megawatts) or less, (Pacific Power) absorbs that cost,” Patterson said. “If you’re going for more than 2 (megawatts), they request financial assistance and a five-year payback for those costs. Which is why the data center is a real struggle. They need almost three and a half times more power than is available right now in the system.”

Otherwise, Corbett said Pacific Power has enough electricity to provide energy to 90 percent of Airport Road’s future demand.

Trump tells anxious tech leaders: ‘We’re here to help’

NEW YORK (AP) — President-elect Donald Trump, who faced fierce opposition from some Silicon Valley leaders during the election campaign, strove to assure the titans of tech on Wednesday that his administration is “here to help you folks do well.”

Trump, still savoring his election victory, convened a summit at Trump Tower for nearly a dozen tech leaders, whose industry largely supported Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton. Many in the industry are worried that Trump will stifle innovation, curb the hiring of computer-savvy immigrants and infringe on consumers’ digital privacy.

He immediately tried to allay those fears. “We want you to keep going with the incredible innovation. Anything we can do to help this go on, we will be there for you,” Trump said. “You’ll call my people, you’ll call me. We have no formal chain of command around here.”

Perry would bring oil industry ties to Energy Department

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rick Perry, President-elect Donald Trump’s choice for energy secretary, has close ties to the Texas oil industry and corporate roles in two petroleum companies pushing for government approval of the proposed 1,200-mile crude oil pipeline that has stoked mass protests in North Dakota.

Perry’s current position as board director at Energy Transfer Partners LP and also at Sunoco Logistics Partners LP, which jointly developed the controversial Dakota Access Pipeline project, is a strong indicator of the pro-oil industry sentiment that will likely take root at the Energy Department under his oversight. The former Texas governor is close to Texas energy industry executives, and his political campaigns, including two failed presidential bids, benefited substantially from their donations.

Perry would not have authority to intervene directly after the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers’ decision last month to delay the pipeline to allow talks with the Standing Rock Sioux and other project opponents. The Army will decide whether to grant an easement near the Sioux reservation in North Dakota, and the departments of Energy, Interior and Justice and the Environmental Protection Agency have had lesser supporting roles.

Trump announced his choice of Perry on Wednesday, calling him “one of the most successful governors in modern history, having led Texas through a sustained period of economic growth and prosperity by developing the state’s energy resources and infrastructure.”
