LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — Roberto Ramos considers himself a simple craftsman, but each Christmas his capable hands restore the splendor to antique baby Jesus figurines.

At his tiny workshop, inside an old house in the center of La Paz, dozens of figurines with mangled fingers, dead eyes, haggard faces and dusty hair arrive from the United States, Italy, Spain and Peru for him to revive.

"Restoring them is more difficult than making a new one because you have to work on them respecting the form, the color that their creator gave them," he said.

His daughter Maria, 45, learned the skills and now is his assistant.
