Berlin attack suspect slain in shootout with Milan police

MILAN (AP)—A routine request for ID papers outside a deserted train station in Milan at 3 a.m. Friday led to a police shootout that killed the Tunisian fugitive wanted in the deadly Christmas market attack in Berlin.

While authorities expressed relief that the search for Anis Amri was over, his four-day run raised fresh questions about whether he had any accomplices and how Europe can stop extremists from moving freely across its open borders, even amid an intense manhunt.

Italian police said Amri traveled from Germany through France and into Italy after Monday night's truck rampage in Berlin, and at least some of his journey was by rail. French officials refused to comment on his passage through France, which has increased surveillance on trains after recent attacks in France and Germany.

Italian Premier Paolo Gentiloni called for greater cross-border police cooperation, suggesting some dismay that Europe's open frontier policy had enabled Amri to move around easily despite being its No. 1 fugitive.

Amri, whose fingerprints and wallet were found in the truck that plowed into Christmas market outside Berlin's Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church, killing 12 people and injuring 56 others, was caught seemingly by chance after eluding police for more than three days.

"He was a ghost," Milan police chief Antonio de Iesu said, adding that Amri was stopped because of basic police work, intensified surveillance "and a little luck."

Like other cities, Milan has been on heightened alert, with increased surveillance and police patrols. Italian officials stressed that the two young officers who stopped Amri didn't suspect he was the Berlin attacker, but rather grew suspicious because he was a North African man, alone outside a deserted train station in the dead of night.

Amri, who had spent time in prison in Italy, was confronted by the officers

People walk past candles and flowers after the reopening of the Christmas market at the Kaiser Wilhelm Memorial Church in Berlin, Germany, Thursday, three days after a truck ran into the crowded market killing 12 people and injuring 56 others.

Anis Amri, a 24-year-old Tunisian, was shot dead early Friday by police conducting a routine stop in Milan after he opened fire on them.

in the Sesto San Giovanni neighborhood of Milan. He pulled a gun from his backpack after being asked to show his ID and was killed in an ensuing shootout.

One of the officers, Christian Movio, 35, was shot in the right shoulder and had surgery for what doctors said was a superficial wound. His 29-year-old partner, Luca Scata, fatally shot Amri in the chest.

The suspect had no ID or cellphone and carried only a pocket knife and the loaded .22-caliber pistol he used to shoot Movio, police said. He was identified with the help of fingerprints supplied by Germany.

The Islamic State group has claimed responsibility for Monday's attack. On Friday, it noted his death in Milan and released a separate video showing Amri swearing allegiance to the group's leader, Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, while vowing to fight non-Muslims.

The video, which appeared to have been taken by Amri himself, showed him on a footbridge in northern Berlin, not far from where the truck used in the attack was hijacked. It was not known when the video

Bundy wants hearing to challenge detention status

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The eldest son of jailed Nevada cattleman Cliven Bundy asked again Friday for a chance to argue that he's no threat to others and wouldn't skip town if he's released from custody ahead of his trial on charges stemming from an armed standoff with federal agents at his family's ranch.

"They are holding me, and have been holding me, for almost a year based on lies," Ryan Bundy told U.S. Magistrate Judge George Foley Jr. "The truth will set me free," the defendant said — in an apparent echo of a biblical passage.

Foley said he'll make a written decision soon but didn't say when.

Ryan Bundy, 44, is serving as his own attorney in Nevada, just as he did during a six-week federal trial in Portland, Oregon, where a jury acquitted him, his brother, Ammon Bundy, and five other people of conspiracy and weapon charges in a 41-day occupation of a federal wildlife refuge.

In Oregon, Bundy sometimes clashed with the judge about what she termed "frivolous matters" and issues that had been previously decided. He said during closing arguments that injustice anywhere is a threat to justice anywhere — echoing the words of the Rev. Martin Luther King.

Ryan and Ammon Bundy both refused earlier this month to enter a federal courtroom in Las Vegas for a lengthy pretrial and date-setting before a different magistrate hearing judge.

The brothers and their father are among 17 people jailed while awaiting trial on conspiracy, obstruction, weapon, threat and other charges. Two other defendants have pleaded guilty and remain in federal custody awaiting sentencing.

Trial is slated to begin Feb. 6 in Las Vegas for the first six defendants, who prosecutors characterize as "followers and gunmen" in the tense 2014 showdown that blocked a federal Bureau of Land Management round-up of Bundy cattle from public land.

Trial for the accused conspiracy leaders and organizers — Cliven, Ammon and Ryan Bundy, and co-defendants Peter Santilli and Ryan Payne — is set to start 30 days after the first trial ends.

Ryan Bundy on Friday labeled the incident outside Bunkerville as "the so-called standoff" and called it "completely non-violent."

He said he believes that if he gets a chance to question prosecutors, character witnesses and his family members under oath, he can convince the judge that he's not a threat and would attend future court appearances.
