Judge to dismiss charge against former Portland police chief after shooting friend

PORTLAND (AP) — A Harney County judge said Friday that he will dismiss a negligent wounding charge against Larry O'Dea, who resigned as Portland's police chief last year after shooting a friend during an off-duty camping trip.

Judge William Cramer accepted a civil compromise in the case but said he will not sign off on it until O'Dea follows county policy and comes to the jail to be booked, fingerprinted and released.

O'Dea's attorney, Derek

O'Dea

Ashton, assured the judge his client will come to Burns next week, The Oregonian/OregonLive reported.

O'Dea had been chief for little more than a year when he shot Robert Dempsey on April 21, 2016. O'Dea and Dempsey were part of a group of friends who take an annual camping trip. They were firing at squirrels in the remote Catlow Valley when Dempsey got hit in the back. He was airlifted to an Idaho hospital, where he was treated and released.

O'Dea didn't identify himself as Portland's police chief when Harney County deputies spoke with him, and he said it appeared Dempsey shot himself in a mishap. A deputy noted in his report that he smelled alcohol on O'Dea's breath.

A few days after the incident, the chief informed then-Portland Mayor Charlie Hales that he had accidentally shot a friend. Harney County authorities, however, didn't learn the truth until weeks later, when the victim finally spoke with an investigator.

The chief resigned in June as controversy swirled, mostly from the fact that he and Hales kept the incident secret for weeks.

Dempsey, who is not on the Portland police force, wrote in a statement to the court that he has been fully compensated for his injuries and did not want his friend prosecuted.

"Larry O'Dea was not intoxicated nor was he impaired by alcohol on April 21, 2016," Dempsey's statement said. "I have told the prosecuting attorneys this. I have also told the prosecuting attorneys that I do not want to be part of this prosecution."

In agreeing to dismiss the charge, the judge said he was relying heavily on Dempsey's statement, and O'Dea's lack of a prior criminal record.

New judge on Pendleton business owner's drug case

PENDLETON — Pendleton downtown business owner Jason Lybrand has a hearing Tuesday morning in his drug crimes case. And a new judge is presiding over it.

Lybrand, who turns 46 on Sunday, has pleaded not guilty to felony charges of possession and delivery of methamphetamine and delivery of a federal Schedule III substance (methadrolone, a steroid) and misdemeanor charges of delivery of marijuana and possession of the Schedule IV opioid pain killer tramadol. He remains out of jail after a relative posted $15,000 for bail.

The Umatilla County District Attorney's office is pushing the court to have the state apply that money to the $67,000 he owes in child support, according to court documents.

Circuit Judge Lynn Hampton ordered the bail money remain in the custody of the court for the time being. The case now, though, is in the hands of new Circuit Judge Jon Lieuallen, who won the seat on the 6th Judicial District in the November election.

Court records also show Lybrand on Sept. 26 agreed to move from a residence at 3510 N.E. King Place, Pendleton, and pay back rent within 90 days.

UO student files lawsuit over slow diagnosis

EUGENE (AP) — A University of Oregon student seeks $3 million in a lawsuit against medical providers who she says failed to properly diagnose her with meningococcal disease in 2015.

The Register-Guard reports that Christina Jenkins' lawsuit is the second from the disease outbreak that struck the campus in 2015.

The lawsuit asserts a physician's assistant at an Oregon Medical Group clinic administered a nasal swab test for the flu. When that test came back negative, she advised Jenkins to drink more fluids and get some rest.

Officials discourage ER visits for mild flu

East Oregonian

Going straight to the emergency room for mild flu symptoms can spread the infection and tie up resources for people with more serious ailments, according to the Oregon Health Authority.

Severe symptoms like shortness of breath or confusion still call for emergency treatment, and high-risk patients like pregnant women, the elderly, young children and the immune-compromised should be monitored carefully. But a news release from the OHA noted that most healthy people with mild symptoms like a sore throat or slight fever recover by resting and drinking plenty of fluids.

Those with non-urgent symptoms should stay home, or call their primary care physician if they think they need medical care.

"Emergency departments are busy, and people with mild symptoms who want to be seen can protect others and avoid long waits in the ER by calling their primary care provider before heading to the hospital," the news release stated.

Severe symptoms in adults include shortness of breath, pain or pressure in the chest or abdomen, sudden dizziness, confusion, severe or persistent vomiting, purple or blue lips or seizures. Children should be seen urgently if they have fast or troubled breathing, bluish skin or lips, are not waking up or interacting, become so irritable they do not want to be held, have a fever with a rash or get better but then come back with a fever or cough. Infants should get medical help right away if they are unable to eat, have a hard time breathing, do not have tears when they cry or have many fewer wet diapers than normal.

Flu cases have spiked in Oregon in recent weeks, with the H3N2 strain of influenza A accounting for most of the cases reported by laboratories.

The Oregon Health Authority offered these additional tips for flu season:

- Get the flu vaccine. It's the most effective way to prevent the flu.
- Understand the severity of flu symptoms and know when it's OK to just stay home.
- If you are at high risk for severe illness contact your health care provider with concerns.
- Stay home and limit contact with others while sick.
- Cough or sneeze into a tissue then throw the tissue away.
- Wash your hands with soap and water frequently.
