DEAR ABBY

Wife whose husband fights dirty may need a clean break

JEANNE PHILLIPS Advice

Dear Abby: Because I had a promiscuous past prior to getting married, it was understandable that my husband and I have gone through some rough patches...

friends with a bachelor for 30 years. Over the past year we have had a problem with him that is seriously straining our friendship.

When is enough, enough? Where is the point that I can give in to the thought that I can't do it anymore? Or is this just what marriage is?

In addition, it's obvious he doesn't wash his hands, as the sink and soap are bone-dry. I don't want him to come over anymore.

Since the counseling you had didn't work, you must now decide whether you need to try again with a different therapist or talk to a lawyer.

You are all adults, and longtime friends should be able to speak frankly with each other. Because your husband is closer to him than you are, he's the one who needs to talk to him 'man to man' and point out the fact that there is a problem and then ask what might be wrong.
