POACHING: They still will have misdemeanor convictions on their records

and Benton counties have ordered at least four other men to pay $7,500 to $15,000 in restitution for killing elk, deer and at least one wild turkey.

But in written rulings on Samora's and Plagmann's cases, Gilliam County Circuit Judge John Olson wrote that the law explicitly allows the State Fish and Wildlife Commission to file a lawsuit for $25,000 per sheep from the men, but it doesn't say that the judge can order the defendants to pay.

Olson wrote that the commission is free to file a lawsuit if it so chooses.

In Begay's case, Wasco County Circuit Judge Janet Stauffer wrote that the prosecution hadn't proven that Begay's crime directly resulted in the loss of $25,000 in tangible "economic damages" to the state.

Mike Arnold, Plagmann's defense attorney, described the arrest and prosecution of his client "a disappointing waste of resources."

"All Cody (Plagmann) and the co-defendant (Samora) did was cut off the heads of two already dead rams," Arnold wrote in an email to The Oregonian/OregonLive. "There is no economic loss to the state for a dead ram in two pieces versus one."

Although the three men have so far avoided the huge penalties, they still will have misdemeanor convictions on their records.

Begay is scheduled to be sentenced in June.

Plagmann and Samora, who already have been sentenced, were ordered to one year of probation, 40 to 80 hours of community service, a three-year ban from hunting and fines ranging from $1,500 to $2,000. Plagmann also received a 40-day jail sentence.

Immigrants being held in jail stage hunger strike

SALEM (AP) — Immigrants in a jail serving four counties in Oregon recently held a hunger strike over "horrible" conditions, say activists who allege officials are breaking state law by holding people for federal immigration authorities.

The U.S. Customs and Enforcement Agency pays the Northern Oregon Regional Corrections Facility, or NORCOR, to hold detainees, according to a NORCOR budget document.

A 1987 Oregon law prohibits law enforcement officers from detaining people who are in the U.S. illegally but have not broken other laws. Gov. Kate Brown in February ordered all state agencies to follow the policy. Her office declined to comment on whether NORCOR might be violating the law.

Mudslides halt rail traffic between Seattle, Portland

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — Officials with BNSF Railway say mudslides have forced the suspension of train traffic on a heavily traveled section of rails between Seattle, Washington, and Portland, Oregon.

Gus Melonas, spokesman for the Burlington Northern and Santa Fe Railway, says early Friday that 10 slides just north of the Tacoma Narrows Bridge have halted rail traffic. The multiple slides came hours after a series of thunderstorms rolled through western Washington.

He says a 48-hour hold has been put on Amtrak trains between Seattle and Portland, and that hold is scheduled to last until 11:30 p.m. Saturday. On its website, Amtrak says it is seeking alternate

Department of Human Services to get new director

By PETER WONG
 Capital Bureau

SALEM — Clyde Saiki is retiring after two tumultuous years as director of the Department of Human Services, the state's largest agency.

In an email to staff Friday, Saiki said he will be succeeded by Fariborz Pakseresh, director of the Oregon Youth Authority since 2012.

The changeover takes effect Sept. 1, although Senate confirmation of Pakseresh's appointment is required. Saiki will stay on in a limited role during the transition.

Saiki, 60, had previously worked at DHS for 23 years, rising to become its chief administrative officer and deputy director of operations before he took a similar position at the Department of Transportation in 2010.

He was Gov. Kate Brown's choice in 2015 for director of the Department of Administrative Services — the budget and management agency for state government — after Michael Jordan resigned.

Brown then sent Saiki back to DHS in November 2015 following news reports about serious problems with the foster care system. He became permanent director in March 2016, and shortly afterward he fired two child welfare officials.

"In his three decades of service to the State of Oregon, Clyde has demonstrated exemplary leadership at every agency," Brown said in a statement. "I would like to thank him for his contributions to DHS and for his continued leadership through the summer to ensure a smooth transition when Fariborz takes the helm on Sept. 1."

Deputy Director Joe O'Leary will lead the youth authority on an interim basis.

"Before the new director arrives, we need to finish the legislative session and begin the important work of implementing the 2017-19 budget — with investments and reductions still to be determined," Saiki said in the email. "There is much work to do between now and September, and while I know an adjustment to a new director will take time I hope that we can continue to work full steam ahead."
