

DISASTER: Ham radio will be an integral tool for communication

responders," he said.

After people prepare their families, the next step should be helping their workplace — be it a small business, a hospital or city hall — prepare. Umatilla County emergency manager Tom Roberts praised the city of Weston for starting an emergency management committee, which Weston mayor Jennifer Spurgeon said has been tasked with creating an emergency management plan for the city that will put up-to-date information all in one place for the community to take action in the event of a disaster.

Eastern Oregon Telecom CEO Joseph Franel, who emceed the day-long event, noted that Hermiston's fire and police departments are storing emergency food and water not only for their employees but also the employees' families, so that officers, EMTs and others feel comfortable enough about their families' situation to come to work during a disaster.

Next steps

Law enforcement and fire services were two of the subjects of the 90-minute break-out sessions during the afternoon. Pendleton police chief Stuart Roberts said his group talked about the need for continued training and coordination on the "significant challenges" their departments will face in providing traffic management and security in an environment with no electricity, limited forms of communication and a huge influx of both refugees and responders.

The fire services group noted the strong collaboration that went on during the Chemical Stockpile Emergency Preparedness Program (CSEPP) and the need to build on those relationships and communications structures to prepare for Cascadia.

Casey White-Zollman said the education group talked about teaching students emergency preparedness principles and sending home information for their families. They also talked about doing seismic upgrades to school buildings where possible and creating plans for how to secure campuses in situations where refugees are pouring into the area.

Participants from the health care group discussed ways to encourage employee preparedness and beef up emergency communication capabilities via ham radio. Many hospitals have generators for power, group members said, but still need to make plans for having the water necessary to continue operation if the city's water system is not working.

They also discussed creating special staffing schedules to be used in the event of a mass disaster, encouraging more people to pre-register as certified emergency medical volunteers and finding volunteers to help with paperwork when computer systems are inaccessible. Lastly, they discussed creating a plan for using agricultural cold storage facilities as emergency morgues if needed.

Hermiston Assembly of God pastor Terry Haight said the faith-based group discussed having churches take an inventory of what they may be able to offer up immediately during Cascadia in the form of space and manpower.

"Churches are the most under-utilized piece of real estate in your community," he said.

They also discussed the need to encourage their parishioners to prepare for emergencies now, and to create easily activated networks of volunteers with skills such as construction work and counseling.

The communications group discussed the need to assess and plan for communication in a Cascadia situation. The discussion went as high-tech as ham radio and satellite internet and as low-tech as daily paper bulletins posted at city hall and sending messages between cities via horseback after the state's fuel supply is wiped out by Cascadia.

The economic impacts group discussed using chambers of commerce to provide workshops and other training for local business owners on how to be resilient in an emergency. That training could include what to look for in an insurance policy, maintaining security without electricity and how to decide which components of the business are "critical functions."

The city managers and mayors discussed the need to go through cycles of assessing, planning and training to keep the city functioning in the event of a disaster.

Videos of the summit, copies of presenters' Powerpoint presentations and each group's list of "next steps" will be available on Blue Mountain Community College's website later in the week.

"Remember, this is just the beginning of the work we have ahead of us," Franel said.

Report: Trump shared highly classified information about IS with Russians

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Donald Trump revealed highly classified information about Islamic State militants to Russian officials during a meeting last week, The Washington Post reported Monday, prompting strong condemnation from both Democrats and Republicans.

Three White House officials who were in the May 10 meeting strongly denounced the story, saying no intelligence sources and methods were discussed — but they didn't deny that classified information was disclosed.

Citing current and former U.S. officials, the Post said Trump shared details about an Islamic State terror threat related to the use of laptop computers on aircraft with Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov and Russian Ambassador to the U.S. Sergey Kislyak.

The anonymous officials told the Post that the information Trump relayed during the Oval Office meeting had been provided by a U.S. partner through an intelligence-sharing arrangement. They said it was considered so sensitive that details have been withheld from allies and tightly restricted even within the U.S. government.

"I was in the room, it didn't happen," H.R. McMaster, Trump's national security adviser, told reporters outside the White House late Monday.

Trump details anti-abortion ban over U.S. global health aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Donald Trump is moving forward with a plan to massively expand a ban on federal dollars going to international groups that perform abortions or provide abortion information.

Senior administration officials said Monday that a plan to expand the so-called "Mexico City Policy" had gone into effect. The policy would apply broadly to organizations receiving U.S. global health assistance. Past versions of the ban specifically targeted international family planning groups.

About $8.8 billion in funding could be impacted, far more than the $600,000 covered under the previous version of the ban. The expanded policy is being dubbed "Protecting Life in Global Health Assistance."

U.S. accuses Syria of burning bodies to hide proof of mass killings

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States accused Syria on Monday of executing thousands of imprisoned political opponents and burning their bodies in a crematorium to hide the evidence.

The allegation could test the Trump administration's willingness to respond to atrocities, other than chemical weapons attacks, that it blames on President Bashar Assad's government.

The allegation of mass killings came as President Donald Trump weighs options in Syria, where the U.S. launched cruise missiles on a government air base last month after accusing Assad's military of killing scores of civilians with a sarin-like nerve agent. Trump on Monday kicked off a week of meetings with Middle East leaders, sitting down with the crown prince of Abu Dhabi a day before he hosts Turkey's president. Trump flies to Saudi Arabia later this week.

Huge cyberattack ebbs as investigators work to find culprits

NEW YORK (AP) — The global cyberattack that took computer files hostage appeared to slow on Monday as authorities worked to catch the extortionists behind it — a difficult task that involves searching for digital clues and following the money.

Among their findings so far: The first suggestions of a possible link between the "ransomware" known as WannaCry and hackers linked to North Korea. Those findings remain quite tentative; one firm advancing them described them as intriguing but still "weak."
