Roger Moore, James Bond film star, dies at 89

LONDON (AP) — Roger Moore, the suave insouciant star of seven James Bond films, has died in Switzerland. He was 89.

The British actor died Tuesday after a short battle with cancer, according to a family statement posted on Moore's official Twitter account.

"We know our own love and admiration will be magnified many times over, across the world, by people who knew him for his films, his television shows and his passionate work for UNICEF, which he considered to be his greatest achievement," the statement said.

Moore's relaxed style and sense of whimsy, which relied heavily on the arched eyebrow, seemed a commentary on the essential ridiculousness of the Bond films, in which the handsome British secret agent was as adept at mixing martinis, bedding beautiful women and ordering gourmet meals as he was at disposing of super-villains trying to take over the world.

"To me, the Bond situations are so ridiculous, so outrageous," he once said. "I mean, this man is supposed to be a spy and yet, everybody knows he's a spy. Every bartender in the world offers him martinis that are shaken, not stirred. What kind of serious spy is recognized everywhere he goes? It's outrageous. So you have to treat the humor outrageously as well."

While he never eclipsed Sean Connery in the public's eye as the definitive James Bond, Moore did play the role of secret agent 007 in just as many films as British actor Roger Moore, playing the title role of secret service agent 007, James Bond, is shown on location in England in 1972. Moore played Bond in seven films, more than any other actor.

Connery did, and he managed to do so while "finding a joke in every situation," according to film critic Rex Reed.

The actor, who came to the role in 1973 after Connery tired of it, had already enjoyed a long career in films and television, albeit with mixed success.

He was remembered warmly by fans of the popular U.S. 1950s-60s TV series "Maverick" as Beauregard Maverick, the English cousin of the Wild West's Maverick brothers, Bret and Bart. He also starred in the 1959 U.S. series "The Alaskans."

In England, he had a long-running TV hit with "The Saint," playing Simon Templar, the enigmatic action hero who helps put wealthy crooks in jail while absconding with their fortunes. By the time the series, which also aired in the United States, ended in 1969, his partnership with its producers had made him a wealthy man.

Born in London, the only child of a policeman, Moore had studied painting before enrolling in the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art. He played a few small roles in theater and films before his mandatory army duty, then moved to Hollywood in the 1950s. He appeared opposite Elizabeth Taylor in 1954's "The Last Time I Saw Paris" and with Eleanor Parker in "Interrupted Melody" the following year.

In 1973, he made his first Bond film, "Live and Let Die."

He would make six more, "The Man With the Golden Gun," "The Spy Who Loved Me," "Octopussy," "Moonraker," "For Your Eyes Only" and "A View to a Kill" over the next 12 years. And while the Bond of the Ian Fleming novels that the films were based on was generally described as being in his 30s, Moore would stay with the role until he was 57.

He continued to work regularly in films after handing over Bond to Timothy Dalton, but never with the same success. His post-Bond films included such forgettable efforts as "The Quest" with Jean-Claude Van Damme and "Spice World" with the Spice Girls.

Ford Family Foundation awards scholarships

EUGENE — The Ford Family Foundation has selected 105 students from Oregon and 15 students from Siskiyou County, California, as new Ford Scholars. This year's Ford Scholars were chosen from 5,883 applicants.

Eligibility criteria include financial need and merit qualifications. In addition, scholars must attend an accredited, nonprofit college in their home state and be pursuing a bachelor's degree full-time. The renewable scholarship covers 90 percent of each student's unmet financial need for each academic year.

The following local students were awarded Ford Family scholarships:

Hermiston: Vanessa Ambriz-Mendoza and Jahayra Garcia-Sandoval; Irrigon: Selene Andrade-Bernal and Marlina Serratos; and Umatilla: Salvador Alvarez and Samantha Ball.

In addition, Jennie Wolfe of Pendleton was named a Ford Opportunity Scholar.

The late Mrs. Hallie Ford, who established the unique scholarship program in 1996, wanted to help college students who face the additional responsibilities of being single parents by providing financial assistance, advising and support services.

Eligibility criteria include financial need and merit qualifications. In addition, recipients must be single "heads-of-household" and pursue a bachelor's degree full-time at an accredited, nonprofit college in his/her state of residence. The renewable scholarship covers up to 90 percent of each student's unmet financial need for college.

Hallie and Kenneth Ford created The Ford Family Foundation in 1957 after the business they founded, Roseburg Forest Products Co., had experienced two decades of growth. Other scholarships supported by the foundation include the Ford ReStart Scholarship Program and The Ford Family Foundation Scholarship.

Program for Sons and Daughters of Employees of Roseburg Forest Products Co. Since 1994, the foundation's scholarship programs have awarded more than $157 million.
